

Learner Identity Amid Figured Worlds: Constructing (In)competence at an Urban High School

Beth C. Rubin

This article explores the figured world of learning at urban Oakcity High School, describing the learner identities that were available to students amid the practices, categories, discourses and interactions of this world. My aims are 2-fold and inter-connected: (1) to reframe a taken-for-granted phenomenon—that students tend to do poorly at urban high schools serving low income students of color, and (2) to apply a situated perspective and the concepts of figured worlds and positional identities to the study of learning and identity at an urban high school, expanding the use of these concepts in educational research.

KEY WORDS: urban education; identity; figured worlds; learning; equity; high school.

INTRODUCTION

Reconstructed from fieldnotes, first day of data collection at Oakcity High:

“Let’s go!” “Move it!” Stern adult male voices are easily heard above the sounds of adolescents moving through the packed, locker-lined hallway. I note the crackle of walkie-talkies. A bell sounds and the halls empty.

Constructing Incompetence

Thomas Beven

Constructing Incompetence:

Constructing (in)competence Dana Kovarsky, Madeline Maxwell, Judith F. Duchan, 2013-06-17 Competence and incompetence are constructs that emerge in the social milieu of everyday life. Individuals are continually making and revising judgments about each other's abilities as they interact. The flexible, situated view of competence conveyed by the research of the authors in this volume is a departure from the way that competence is usually thought about in the fields of communication disabilities and education. In the social constructivist view, competence is not a fixed mass residing within an individual or a fixed judgment defined externally. Rather, it is variable, sensitive to what is going on in the here and now, and coconstructed by those present. Constructions of competence are tied to evaluations implicit in the communication of the participants as well as to explicit evaluations of how things are going. The authors address the social construction of competence in a variety of situations: engaging in therapy for communication and other disorders; working and living with people with disabilities; speaking a second language; living with deafness; and giving and receiving instruction. Their studies focus on adults and children, including those with disabilities: aphasia, traumatic brain injury, augmentative systems users, as they go about managing their lives and identities. They examine the all-important context in which participants make competence judgments, assess the impact of implicit judgments and formal diagnoses, and look at the types of evaluations made during interaction. This book makes an argument all helping professionals need to hear: institutional, clinical, and social practices promoting judgments must be changed to practices that are more positive and empowering.

Scientific Realism in Studies of Reading Alan D. Flurkey, Eric J. Paulson, Kenneth S. Goodman, 2020-08-13 This book provides research-based insights that deepen and broaden current understandings of the nature of reading. Informed by psycholinguistic and sociolinguistic views of reading as meaning construction, the studies build on principles of scientific realism, an approach to inquiry that incorporates and values a wide variety of methods of observation to find the most inclusive, ecologically valid description of the reading process as it is observed in a variety of contexts from a wide range of perspectives. Focusing on how facts are discovered, developed, and used in the construction of knowledge about reading, a data-driven and theory-driven construction that results from observing the reading process with a variety of tools, methods, disciplines, and conceptual frameworks, scientific realism goes beyond rationalism and experimentation to include studies of events and experiences but still satisfies even the most narrow definitions of what state and national lawmakers refer to as reliable and replicable research on reading. Each study in this volume breaks ground for a new line of reading research underpinned by the theory of reading based in scientific realism. Scientific Realism in Studies of Reading is directed to reading researchers, teacher educators, reading specialists, special educators, graduate students, and related education professionals in the disciplines of applied psycholinguistics and sociolinguistics and is appropriate as a text for advanced courses in these areas.

Handbook of Communication in Organisations and Professions Christopher N. Candlin, Srikant Sarangi, 2011-08-29 This volume presents major contributions of Applied Linguistics to the understanding of communications in the professions. The first two parts of this book deal with the theoretical and methodological orientations of professional communication studies, the history and development of professional communication studies highlighting the discursive turn of Applied Linguistic research that goes far beyond the established paradigm of Language for Specific Purposes. The third part, the core of this book, presents research into professional practices from various domains, e.g., law, healthcare, business, and management organizations, sites of engagement, as e.g., lawyer-client conference, doctor-patient interaction, and with respect to different themes that are generalizable across domains and sites, as e.g., communicative aspects of action and practice of assessment and appraisal. In the final part, professionals from various domains evaluate the contribution to their work so far made by Applied Linguistics.

The Development of Judgment and Decision Making in Children and Adolescents Janis E. Jacobs, Paul A.

Klaczynski, 2006-04-21 In recent years, newspaper articles, television specials, and other media events have focused on the numerous hard decisions faced by today's youth, often pointing to teen pregnancy, drug use, and delinquency as evidence of faulty judgment. Over the past 10 years, many groups, including parents, educators, policymakers, and researchers, have become concerned about the decision-making abilities of children and adolescents, asking why they make risky choices, how they can be taught to be better decision makers, and what types of age-related changes occur in decision making. This book serves as a starting point for those interested in considering new ways of thinking about the development of these issues. The purpose is to bring together the voices of several authors who are conducting cutting-edge research and developing new theoretical perspectives related to the development of judgment and decision making. The Development of Judgment and Decision Making in Children and Adolescents is divided into three parts. Part I presents three distinctive developmental models that offer different explanations of what develops and the relative importance of different cognitive components and experiential components that may be important for developing judgment and decision-making skills. Part II emphasizes the emotional, cultural, and social aspects of decision making, three topics that have been influential in the adult literature on judgment and decision making but are just beginning to be explored in the developmental area. Part III provides three examples of research that applies developmental and decision-making models to practical research questions. This book is intended for the professional market or for graduate courses on decision making or cognitive or social development. Deciding for Others
