The Presidential Pulse of Congressional Elections James E. Campbell, 2014-07-11 An intriguing phenomenon in American electoral politics is the loss of seats by the president's party in midterm congressional elections. Between 1862 and 1990 the president's party lost seats in the House of Representatives in 32 of the 33 midterm elections. In his new study James Campbell examines explanations for these midterm losses and explores how presidential elections influence congressional elections. After reviewing the two major theories of midterm electoral change, the surge and decline theory and the theory of midterms as referenda on presidential performance, Campbell draws upon each to propose and test a new theory. He asserts that in the years of presidential elections, congressmen ride presidential coattails into office, while in midterm elections such candidates are stranded. An additional factor is the strength of the presidential vote, which influences the number of seats that are won only to be lost later. Finally, Campbell examines how the presidential pulse may affect electoral accountability, the relationship between Congress and the president, and the relative strength of Congress, the president, and political parties. He explores the implications of the presidential pulse for understanding electoral change, evaluating the American voter's competence, and assessing the importance of split ticket voting. Including both election returns and survey data, The Presidential Pulse of Congressional Elections offers a fresh perspective on congressional elections, voting behavior, Congress, and the presidency.

Congress and the Politics of Foreign Policy Colton C. Campbell, Nicol C. Rae, John F. Stack, 2003 This volume explores the changing parameters of presidential-congressional relations in the area of foreign policy. It addresses the struggle between the three branches of government in view of increasing congressional assertiveness and the complexity of the president's multiple foreign policy agendas. The essays constitute a comprehensive study on foreign policy making in the 21st century, describing how foreign policy is actually made in Washington, D.C. in such areas as trade, arms control and proliferation, alliances, defense, and intelligence, budgets, sanctions, war, power, treaties, and executive agreements, financial aid, diplomacy, procedural legislation, treaty ratification, and advice and consent. For anyone who wants to advance their understanding and appreciation for the role of three American institutions in the crafting of foreign policy making: the United States Congress, the American Presidency, and the United States Supreme Court.
