

Another point about constructive philosophy:

- ❖ Traditionally, the aim of constructive philosophy was quite ambitious. It was to construct a comprehensive, coherent, & intellectually (& perhaps emotionally) satisfying world-view or philosophical system in which everything “falls into place,” has meaning, & makes sense.
- ❖ However, in modern times, many (but not all) constructive philosophers have tended to be more modest in their aims, attempting to answer only a few of the major philosophical questions without attempting the construction of a world-view or philosophical system.

(This is more true of Western than of Eastern philosophy.)
