ripple tank experiment sf scientific - Feb 15 2022

web mar 7 2016 1. A ripple tank is a shallow tank of water in which waves can be studied. It consists of a tank of water, a light source, and a screen. The light source is placed above the tank, and the screen is placed below it. The light from the source passes through the water and is projected onto the screen. The pattern of light and dark regions on the screen represents the wave pattern in the tank. The distance between two consecutive light or dark regions is the wavelength. The frequency of the waves can be determined by counting the number of waves that pass a point in a given time. The speed of the waves can be calculated by dividing the wavelength by the frequency.
