Criscitiello, Eva Sierra, Sandro Mazzariol, 2019-11-21 Marine mammals MMs are regarded as valuable bioindicators with tremendous potential for public health However many aspects of their immune system remain poorly understood Monitoring immune responses of MMs is pivotal for the health assessment of both individuals and populations as well as providing the scientific basis for analyzing the anthropogenic environmental impact on marine ecosystems and marine terrestrial interphases For instance the increasing susceptibility of Mediterranean whale and dolphin populations to various diseases has been linked to a possible negative influence of multiple environmental factors on the immune system of MMs The currently limited knowledge on MM immunology has mainly centered on i lymphocyte transformation assays ii natural killer cell activity iii phagocytic activity and respiratory burst iv humoral immune responses v cytokines and vi acute phase immune responses Therefore further research is essential for deepening our understanding of the specificity of the host immune response in MMs with a particular emphasis on the genesis and dynamics of i cytokine networks or signatures ii transcriptional regulation of immune cells and iii major immunomodulators High throughput molecular techniques such as transcriptomic analysis and RNA sequencing may enable the characterization of immune gene responses at the transcriptomic level This integrative and holistic approach requires sophisticated tools and methods capable of unveiling the diversity of immune cells and immunologically relevant molecules that orchestrate environmental adaptation and immune protection against pathogens in MMs This Research Topic aims to provide a comprehensive overview of the current knowledge of MM immunology with a particular emphasis on structural and functional studies at the protein and cellular level We wish to encourage and coordinate studies and investigations in order to fill gaps of knowledge in this field This article collection aims to help gain more data regarding a The characterization of the immune system in several species of MMs i e cetaceans pinnipeds and sirenians b The interplay between the host immune system and the most relevant pathogens e g Morbillivirus Brucella Toxoplasma gondii and c The possible interplay between the immune system and contaminants
