to be a small one only about seven feet long and of a pale gray ashen color probably a young specimen In general form it is like a whale but more slender The head is narrow and rather high in the forehead The eyes are very small about five eighths of an inch in diameter The ears are hardly visible would scarcely admit a common lead pencil The blow hole as in the true whales is about an inch in diameter The forefeet the only limbs are in the form of short flippers and the tail which is large is formed by an expansion of the thick skin They are more nearly related to the dolphins than to the whales the dolphins porpoises and grampuses forming one of the divisions of the three Cetacea delphinoidea While we were ashore looking at this specimen a much larger one came along parallel with the shore line and not more than twenty or thirty yards from it The natives were on the watch and shot it through the body when it rose to blow Instead of making out to sea when wounded it kept its course alongshore and the natives followed excitedly ready to get another shot They kept it in sight while it was ten or twelve feet under water which they were enabled to do on account of its whiteness Eight or ten men jumped into a canoe and followed it one standing in the bow with a spear After swimming about half a mile and receiving four or more bullets from Henry and Winchester rifles it began to struggle and die The boat came up an Eskimo drove in a spear and the whale was taken in tow and brought back to where the first was killed the crew meanwhile singing in triumph Then a rolling hitch was made and a dozen willing hands landed the animal a female
