Detection Jui Yu Huang,2023 With the increasing number of social media users information on social media platforms like Twitter holds a significant influence on people Additionally the development of artificial intelligence has led to the creation of sophisticated content generation techniques making it difficult to distinguish whether a message came from a real person or an AI bot It is crucial to investigate the effectiveness of existing detection methods on identifying the content originating from this technology Despite previous studies 1 5 7 have focused on using various artificial intelligence techniques to detect tweets generated by deep neural network models and achieved some impressive results The content generation techniques are also growing dramatically The language model such as GPT 3 is well known for its ability to generate human like content it is worth researching the alternatively better method to detect the tweet generated by this technology In this research we generated our own dataset with GPT 3 model using several different approaches such as Bidirectional Encoder Representations from Transformers BERT and GPT 3 itself on detecting both Tweepfake dataset and our own GPT 3 generated dataset Among the different approaches tested to detect AI generated tweets we have founded that BERTweet BERT pre trained with English tweets approach showed remarkable accuracy Specifically it achieved a detection accuracy of over 92% when applied to the Tweepfake dataset and a detection accuracy rate of over 95% when applied to our own dataset generated using GPT 3 This highlights the effectiveness of the BERTweet approach in detecting deepfake tweets and its potential to be applied in real world scenarios to counter the spread of fake information on social media platforms However the GPT 3 as a detector only achieved 50% to 60% accuracy which represent that GPT 3 is not effective in classification task
