Abstract

Modern wheat cultivars can benefit from useful variability introduced from non-progenitor Aegilops species by using synthetic partial amphiploids. Cytological analysis of advanced generation wheat-Aegilops amphiploids (AABBDDU⁴U⁵S⁶S⁶) had 54–58 chromosomes in general with a higher frequency of bivalents (24.0–27.97). The average number of univalents in pollen mother cells (PMCs) varied from 1.32–5.28 with an average of 2.29 per cell. After the reductional division of paired chromosomes, the majority of univalents reached the metaphase-I plate and underwent equational division, eventually being eliminated via laggards and micronuclei. The D genome was the most vulnerable to deletion, followed by the S⁶ and U⁵ genomes, but the 1D chromosome was preferentially eliminated in almost all amphiploids investigated, as confirmed by SDS-PAGE. The partial amphiploids with white glumes, bold seeds, and robust rachis could be employed for wheat biofortification and resistance to powdery mildew. The presence of various important metal homeostasis genes (FRQ2, FRQ6, FRQ7, ZIP2, ZIP4, ZIP5, ZIP7, NAS2, NAS4, YSL15, IRT2, NRAMP5, NAM, and HMA3) from Aegilops species suggests that these partial amphiploids could be used as pre-bred material to introgress the metal homeostasis genes from Aegilops to wheat in wheat biofortification program.

Introduction

With a global output of 775.8 million metric tons in 2019–2020, wheat (Triticum aestivum L.) is the second most significant staple food after maize (<https://www.statista.com/statistics/263977/> world-grain-production-by-type/) and second only to rice in terms of food security. It is consumed by 2.5 billion people in 89 countries, supplying 20% of total calories and 20.42% of protein requirements (<https://wheat.org/wheat-in-the-world/>). Bread wheat originated about 12,000 years ago through hybridization steps followed by doubling of the chromosomes. The Triticum aestivum (AABBDD) is hexaploid wheat which constitutes genome AA from Triticum urartu Tumanian ex Gandilyan and genome DD from Aegilops triuncialis (DD) (Dvořák et al. 1993; Kihara 1944; McFadden and Sears 1946) genome SS from Aegilops speltoides Tausch or a closely related species contributed the B genome (Paris et al. 2002; Riley et al. 1958). There are about 25,000 different wheat cultivars currently available in the world.

For optimal growth and development, a balanced diet with adequate calories, proteins, and micronutrients is required. Despite the rising food supply, over half of the world population is malnourished owing to micronutrients and vitamin deficiencies. Due to the chelating effect, phytates can dramatically reduce calcium, iron, and zinc absorption in humans (Bohn et al. 2008). Micronutrients like Fe and Zn are vital in both plants and animals including humans (Shi et al. 2010). However, the high prevalence of Fe and Zn deficiency is often correlated with the higher
