

Collecting and identifying fungi

Fungi can be identified without a microscope but most of the time a book can be helpful using macro characters. Look at the shape, colour, size, and smell. Many mushrooms have a long stalk and a large cap. Some are small and some are large. eg. growing on a log or on a tree trunk. Remember the older, mature or large ones may dry or fall.

Macro characters concentrate on characters of the fungus including colour (which is very variable), shape (which can change as the fungus matures), size, smell, and texture. Most species are small, in mushroom-shaped and have gills on the cap. Others, like the chanterelles.

All features are important, especially the way they are attached to the stem. This is a key to the way the cap is built.

Gill Characteristics

A note on the colour of a meat of spores is very important for better identification. Remember some and put the cap gills on
