Abstract

Discourse of the powerful is normally characterised as hegemonic since it lacks, whether consciously or unconsciously, familiarity of historical events and intrinsic knowledge of culture. President Trump's disregard for or over-simplification of the complexities of Middle Eastern cultures in particular, their history, politics, and political geography, his belligerent and rapacious entrepreneurial rhetoric, his authoritarian stance on many global issues combined with the superficial allure of his 'common man' persona, and his hegemonising of many of the world's nations make him the antithesis of the conventional politician. The process of technologization of Donald Trump's discourse that has been influencing the discursive practices surrounding Middle East politics and American foreign policy has given rise to a type of discourse that is unprecedented in modern time American presidencies, a discourse rooted in threat, disregard, and humiliation. Trump's disrespect to heads of states entails disrespect of their people, history, and culture, and this is prevalent in almost all his speeches. This paper focuses primarily on Trump's rhetorical styles in his 28th September 2018 address to the UN, the May 14th 2018 address on the U.S. Embassy move from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem, and finally the April 13th 2018 address on the Syrian airstrikes.

Keywords: technologization, discourse, hegemony, control, discursive practices, humiliation, culture

1. Introduction

Control and hegemony are a powerful discursive tool in the globalisation process of the new world. Technologization of discourse is a means of creating hegemony by consensus. Through this process, discourse technologists (the elites) redesign diverse types of discourses and work processes, turning them into actual representations of consensual praxis. In order for these foreign newly encroached-in discursive practices to find circulation and public support, they require the initiation and the financial and moral support of the powerful people in the society. Language and history are contingent, but wholly human: "Human languages are human creations" (Rorty, 1989, p. 5); "all vocabularies, even those which contain the words which we take most seriously, the ones most essential to our self-descriptions are human creations" (ibid., p. 53). de Man argued that all words and concepts are metaphorical at root. Language is therefore essentially figural or rhetorical rather than intentional, expressive, or referential, and "the paradigm for all texts consists of a figure (or a system of figures) and its deconstruction" (De Man, 1979, p. 205). Disregarding the notions of intention, representation, inference, relevance, context, textual cohesion, mutual assumptions, and so on, de Man argued that there must always be an ironic disparity between meaning and intent. Rhetoric produces a divergence between grammar and referential meaning, which "opens up vertiginous possibilities of referential aberration", wreaks "epistemological damage", and renders the propositional content of utterances undecidable (ibid., p. 10). Here the difference lies between two approaches to language. On the one hand, language is human as it is the creation of humans and their realities. On the other hand, language is inhuman since the conception and understanding of language is not always decisive and accurate. The metaphorical and rhetorical nature of language includes language users' attempts to persuade through manipulation, i.e., influencing the feelings. The world itself and events cannot always be clearly or adequately expressed by language since the world is something and language is something else. This may include but not limited to linguistic structure and linguistic play and tensions. Even feelings, desires, needs, and wishes cannot be expressed adequately by language. Perlocutionary acts done by the use of language, i.e., what is done by using language, is so radically unpredicted and out of our control that they cannot

Simon Dalby: A Pioneer in International Relations Simon Dalby, Roger Boyd, 2025-06-11 This book profiles Simon Dalby's academic contributions in the fields of critical geopolitics environmental security and the intersection of international relations and the Anthropocene It includes reprints of key essays that highlight innovations in critical thought at the intersections between geopolitics environment and security Starting with an analysis of American reconstructions of the Soviet threat in the 1970s an early contribution to the emerging field of critical geopolitics subsequent papers focus on the emergent formulations of environmental security in the aftermath of the Cold War and the environmental costs of globalization Focusing on the implicit geographical framing in discourses of globalization offered a critique that extended the ambit of critical geopolitics to grapple with the issues of environmental security and the rising concern with climate change as well as the political identities invoked in that debate In the aftermath of 9 11 similar arguments about contextualization applied to the American global war on terror and the revival of discussions of empire and its geographies both in arguments for invading Iraq as well as the wider discussions in policy discourse and popular culture Simultaneously the emergence of earth system science and the concept of the Anthropocene offered another way to highlight the dangers of fossil fueled economic activities The necessity of fundamentally rethinking the premises of security policy in light of this recontextualization is emphasized in more recent contributions on climate security and the current ecological crisis Critical geopolitics Environmental security Global war on terror Firepower in the Anthropocene The Foreign Policy Discourse in the United Kingdom and the United States in the New World Order Lori Maguire, 2009 The goal of this book is to examine some of the major foreign policy debates in the United Kingdom and the United States in the period from 1992 to 2008 from the end of the Cold War and the aftermath of the first Gulf War to the 2008 American presidential election The first President Bush spoke in 1991 of a new world order which seemed to mean an American hegemony The United States was now the world's only superpower although a superpower afflicted with weaknesses especially economic ones But by 2008 the new world order did not seem so new or so strongly American The period saw the terrorist attacks against the U S of 11 September 2001 military problems for the superpower in Afghanistan and Iraq and by the summer of 2008 near economic collapse In all of these developments Britain shared to a lesser or a greater extent It is hoped that this book will shed an important light both on each nation and on the so called special relationship between the two Furthermore this book is also not specifically concerned with policy or how policy is made but with the debate around policy and the rhetoric used to present different points of view of the Special Relationship between the US and Britain remains an enigmatic ever changing but still very powerful factor in world politics As an examination of their foreign policy discourses reveals from the perspective of culture and values few Western countries are as different as the United Kingdom and the US With very few exceptions the foreign policies of Gladstone and Tony Blair and Churchillian rhetoric unmatched by his supremely realpolitik politics British governments abhor talking about values and ideals The British cultural peculiarity is to dismiss ideology and values as packaging only to be caught by surprise time and again that they cannot do business with Herr Hitler or that people kill each other for their values religions constructed identities and ideologies Most American governments by contrast have had ideological and moral crusades embroidered on their banners in their foreign policy There is a convergence with Britain when both proclaim that all they are doing is in their self interest but the Americans unashamedly assume that what is good for America is good for the world while the British discourse with the UK's decline since 1945 rarely goes that far As an analysis of their discourses reveals the Special Relationship is thus clearly founded on something either deeper or more superficial than shared culture or values this volume sheds light on this surprising fact in most illuminating ways and Lori Maguire's achievement in bringing together these examinations is praiseworthy indeed Prof Beatrice Heuser University of Reading Chinese Authoritarianism in the Information Age Suisheng Zhao, 2019-06-24 This book examines information and public opinion control by the authoritarian state in response to popular access to information and upgraded political communication channels among the citizens in contemporary China Empowered by mass media particularly social media and other information technology Chinese citizens' access to information has been expanded Publicly focusing events and opinions have served as catalysts to shape the agenda for policy making and law making narrow down the set of policy options and change the pace of policy implementation Yet the authoritarian state remains in tight control of media including social media to deny the free flow of information and shape public opinion through a centralized institutional framework for propaganda and information technologies The evolving process of media control and public opinion manipulation has constrained citizen s political participation and strengthened Chinese authoritarianism in the information age The chapters originally published as articles in the Journal of Contemporary China
