Picking/pulling will make my skin/hair look better. Rebuttal: Who am I kidding? Besides, having imperfect skin/hair is better than the mess I am making of my own doing.

If I keep picking/pulling, eventually I'll fix the problem. Rebuttal: In my heart, I know I will only make things worse.

New growth and healed skin must look just like the rest. I can't stand the prickly new hairs. Rebuttal: I have to accept that regrowth will probably be uneven or imperfect and may not look as good as I hope, especially in the beginning, but it will look and feel better over time. And even if the new growth is never perfect, I can live with it.

I'll just pick/pull for a minute/just one. Rebuttal: How often do I stop after a minute or after just one? Answer: Never!

The urge will not go away until I give in. Rebuttal: Urges don't really last forever. When I get my plan into place I will see that urges come and go.

I will never be able stand the thought of something gross or uncomfortable under my skin (acne, ingrown hairs, other imperfections); I need to remove them now. Rebuttal: Picking or gouging will lead to more blood and scars and just make things worse.

I just have a small bad habit. It's no big deal. Rebuttal: I'm just kidding myself—it has caused me more pain than I can admit.

I'm not always aware when I pick or pull, so it's not my fault. Rebuttal: No excuses! I have to find ways to become more aware so I can heal.

Progress should be even and steady. I can't let myself slip because it will mean I'm back to square one. Rebuttal: This will take time and involve setbacks. I can use slips as learning opportunities. I can't go back to square one because now I know things I didn't know before.
