Handbook of Natural Language Processing Robert Dale, Hermann Moisl, Harold Somers, 2000-07-25 This study explores the design and application of natural language text based processing systems based on generative linguistics empirical corpus analysis and artificial neural networks It emphasizes the practical tools to accommodate the selected system

Survey of the State of the Art in Human Language Technology Giovanni Battista Varile, Antonio Zampolli, 1997 Originally published in 1997 this book is concerned with human language technology This technology provides computers with the capability to handle spoken and written language One major goal is to improve communication between humans and machines If people can use their own language to access information working with software applications and controlling machinery the greatest obstacle for the acceptance of new information technology is overcome Another important goal is to facilitate communication among people Machines can help to translate texts or spoken input from one human language to the other Programs that assist people in writing by checking orthography grammar and style are constantly improving This book was sponsored by the Directorate General XIII of the European Union and the Information Science and Engineering Directorate of the National Science Foundation USA

Proceedings of the Conferences and Proceedings of the ANLP-NAACL 2000 Student Research Workshop Association for Computational Linguistics North American

Chapter, 2000 Voice Communication Between Humans and Machines for the National Academy of Sciences, 1994-02-01 Science fiction has long been populated with conversational computers and robots Now speech synthesis and recognition have matured to where a wide range of real world applications from serving people with disabilities to boosting the nation's competitiveness are within our grasp Voice Communication Between Humans and Machines takes the first interdisciplinary look at what we know about voice processing where our technologies stand and what the future may hold for this fascinating field The volume integrates theoretical technical and practical views from world class experts at leading research centers around the world reporting on the scientific bases behind human machine voice communication the state of the art in computerization and progress in user friendliness It offers an up to date treatment of technological progress in key areas speech synthesis speech recognition and natural language understanding The book also explores the emergence of the voice processing industry and specific opportunities in telecommunications and other businesses in military and government operations and in assistance for the disabled It outlines as well practical issues and research questions that must be resolved if machines are to become fellow problem solvers along with humans Voice Communication Between Humans and Machines provides a comprehensive understanding of the field of voice processing for engineers researchers and business executives as well as speech and hearing specialists advocates for people with disabilities faculty and students and interested individuals

Readings in Intelligent User Interfaces Mark Maybury, Wolfgang Wahlster, 1998-04 This is a compilation of the classic readings in intelligent user interfaces This text

focuses on intelligent knowledge based interfaces combining spoken language natural language processing and multimedia and multimodal processing

Text-based intelligent Systems Paul S. Jacobs, 2014-02-25 The symposium on which this volume was based brought together approximately fifty scientists from a variety of backgrounds to discuss the rapidly emerging set of competing technologies for exploiting a massive quantity of textual information This group was challenged to explore new ways to take advantage of the power of on line text A billion words of text can be more generally useful than a few hundred logical rules if advanced computation can extract useful information from streams of text and help find what is needed in the sea of available material While the extraction task is a hot topic for the field of natural language processing and the retrieval task is a solid aspect in the field of information retrieval these two disciplines came together at the symposium and have been cross breeding more than ever The book is organized in three parts The first group of papers describes the current set of natural language processing techniques used for interpreting and extracting information from quantities of text The second group gives some of the historical perspective methodology and current practice of information retrieval work the third covers both current and emerging applications of these techniques This collection of readings should give students and scientists alike a good idea of the current techniques as well as a general concept of how to go about developing and testing systems to handle volumes of text

Finite-state Language Processing Emmanuel Roche, Yves Schabes, 1997 Finite state devices such as finite state automata graphs and finite state transducers have been present since the emergence of computer science and are extensively used in areas as various as program compilation hardware modeling and database management Although finite state devices have been known for some time in computational linguistics more powerful formalisms such as context free grammars or unification grammars have typically been preferred Recent mathematical and algorithmic results in the field of finite state technology have had a great impact on the representation of electronic dictionaries and on natural language processing resulting in a new technology for language emerging out of both industrial and academic research This book presents a discussion of fundamental finite state algorithms and constitutes an approach from the perspective of natural language processing

The lexicon has emerged from the study of computational linguistics as a fundamental resource that enables a variety of linguistic processes to operate in the course of tasks ranging from language analysis and text processing to machine translation Lexicon acquisition therefore plays an essential part in getting any natural language processing system to function in the real world Computers that process natural language require a variety of lexical information in addition to what can be found in standard dictionaries Moreover machine readable dictionaries of the conventional sort have been found to be inadequate for fully supporting realistic natural language processing tasks This volume describes corpus processing techniques that can be used to extract the additional lexical information required Bringing together a balanced blend of the theoretical and practical the contributions provide the most recent look at lexical acquisition techniques and practices These include coping with unknown lexicalizations task driven lexical induction categorization of lexical units lexical semantics from corpus analysis and measuring lexical acquisition The problems addressed reflect a host of topics including recognition of open compounds incremental acquisition of meanings from sentence usages recognition of new senses of existing words sense disambiguation recognition of specific classes of words and recognition and annotation of patterns of word use each of them important to the overall language analysis process and each employing text analysis techniques in a useful and theoretically motivated way Language Speech and Communication series
