Description Of A Struggle:

Description of a Struggle Franz Kafka, 1960-01-01 Written during Kafka's early twenties and extensively revised between 1904-1909, Description of a Struggle represents his first sustained attempt at prose fiction. The manuscript remained unpublished during his lifetime, with only a fragment appearing in 1909 thanks to Max Brod's intervention. The complete text, published posthumously in 1936, reveals a young writer experimenting with narrative techniques that would later define the Kafkaesque, though here they appear in raw, sometimes uncontrolled forms. The story's structure defies simple summary, shifting between multiple narrative layers and reality levels with dreamlike fluidity. It begins with a party in Prague where the narrator meets an acquaintance but quickly fragments into surreal episodes: a man riding on another's shoulders through an impossible landscape, a prayer that becomes a kind of metaphysical gymnastics, conversations that loop back on themselves like Möbius strips. The text's Prague setting transforms from realistic city streets into a psychological dreamscape where physical laws break down and identity becomes unstable. The term 'struggle' in the title points to both the social anxiety of the characters and the formal struggle of young Kafka finding his literary voice. This collection contains Zwei Gespräche (Two Conversations). These two conversations, titled Gespräch mit dem Beter (Conversation with the Suppliant) and Gespräch mit dem Betrunkenen (Conversation with the Drunkard), are two distinct dialogues that reflect on philosophical and existential themes. Kafka uses these conversations to explore human relationships, misunderstandings, and the struggles inherent in communication. They are less about narrative and more about the interplay of ideas and emotions. Elements that would become hallmarks of Kafka's mature style emerge here in embryonic form: the alienated first-person narrator, the blend of precise physical detail with metaphysical uncertainty, the sense of reality as a thin membrane that might tear at any moment. Max Brod noted how the text's obsession with social interaction and physical embodiment reflected Kafka's own anxieties as a young man in Prague's literary circles. The story's unfinished quality, its abrupt transitions and unresolved plotlines, suggests both artistic immaturity and a deliberate aesthetic of fragmentation that Kafka would later master. Reading it feels like watching a great artist's first attempts to map the territory they would later make their own. This new modern translation from the original German is a fresh, accessible, and beautifully rendered text that brings to life Kafka's great literary work. This edition contains extra amplifying material, including an illuminating afterword, a timeline of Kafka's life and works alongside the historical events which shaped his art, and a short biography to place this work in its socio-historical context.

Description of a Struggle Franz Kafka, 2017-02-01 Description of a Struggle is a three-part story written by Franz Kafka between 1903 and 1907. It constitutes his oldest surviving work and was only published after his death. The first and third sections describe Prague society and night life from the point of view of the author and his acquaintance. The central section can be viewed as a fantastical dream sequence divided into several sub-sections. Kafka wrote two versions of this story.
