

MODEL LAW ON E-COMMERCE

- In today's world, a large number of international trade transactions are carried out by electronic data interchange and , commonly known as "electronic commerce".
- It uses alternatives to paper-based methods of communication and storage of information. The United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL) passed the Model Law on Electronic Commerce (MLEC) to provide a set of internationally acceptable rules by removing legal obstacles and increasing legal predictability for e-commerce.
- It has further improved the efficiency in international trade by providing equal treatment to paper based and electronic information, thus enabling the use of paperless communication.
- UNCITRAL MODEL LAW ON E COMMERCE WAS ADOPTED BY THE UNITED NATIONS COMMISSION ON THE INTERNATIONAL TRADE LAW IN 1996.

The model law is not a comprehensive code-like articulation of the rules for the electronic transactions but rather adopts a limited framework approach and just facilitates e commerce.

- It has adopted the following fundamental principles of the modern electronic-commerce law:
- The principle of non-discrimination – It ensures that any document would not be denied legal validity, effect, and enforceability just because it is in electronic form.
- The principle of technological neutrality – It mandates the adoption of such provisions which are neutral with respect to technology used. This aims to include any new technology without any further legislative work.
- The functional equivalence principle – It sets out the specific requirements that e-communication are required to meet in order to fulfil the same functions that certain notions in traditional paper based system, seek to achieve, for example, "writing", "original", "signed", and "record".
