Kling, 2020-05-05 Conversion has played a central role in the history of Christianity In this first in depth and wide ranging narrative history David Kling examines the dynamic of turning to the Christian faith by individuals families and people groups Global in reach the narrative progresses from early Christian beginnings in the Roman world to Christianity's expansion into Europe the Americas China India and Africa Conversion is often associated with a particular strand of modern Christianity evangelical and a particular type of experience sudden overwhelming However when examined over two millennia it emerges as a phenomenon far more complex than any one dimensional profile would suggest No single unitary paradigm defines conversion and no easily explicable process accounts for why people convert to Christianity Rather a multiplicity of factors historical personal social geographical theological psychological and cultural shape the converting process A History of Christian Conversion not only narrates the conversions of select individuals and peoples it also engages current theories and models to explain conversion and examines recurring themes in the conversion process divine presence gender and the body agency and motivation testimony and memory group and self identity authentic and nominal conversion and modes of communication Accessible to scholars students and those with a general interest in conversion Kling's book is the most satisfying and comprehensive account of conversion in Christian history to date this major work will become a standard must read in conversion studies The Cultural Values of Europe Hans Joas, Klaus Wiegandt, 2008 Explores the common cultural values and traditions of Europe This volume combines two possible approaches examining both specific cultural traditions and specific values It is suitable for those hoping to understand the common cultural ground in Europe Historiein, 2006 Jewish Conversion from the Sixth Through the Twelfth Century

Jessie Sherwood, 2006 Conversions between Judaism and Christianity were rare during much of the Middle Ages yet they were an important facet of relations between Jews and Christians This dissertation examines the changing dynamics of Jewish conversion from the sixth through the twelfth century Among the issues under discussion are forcible baptism religious identity returning converts and converts ability to integrate into Christian society and also analyzes converts texts This thesis makes three related arguments It postulates that religious identity remained plastic throughout the early Middle Ages allowing converts to integrate into their new communities but became more rigid after the late eleventh century Secondly it argues that Christian attitudes toward converts who returned to Judaism grew less tolerant during the twelfth century Thirdly it asserts that using coercion to baptize Jews during the tenth and eleventh centuries became more acceptable in the tenth and eleventh centuries Where possible it also explores converts experiences of and explanations for conversion in the context of these changes arguing that there is often a gap between converts accounts and Christian expectations The first chapter studies the precedents left from the early Middle Ages by surveying the legislation governing and the early accounts of conversion The second chapter investigates the plasticity of religious identity in the tenth and eleventh centuries by examining the extant references to converts while the third chapter deals with the accounts of compulsory baptism from the tenth and eleventh century The fourth chapter surveys twelfth century converts and the expectations of them articulated in Christian conversion stories The fifth chapter turns to the texts left by three twelfth century converts and their understandings of conversion The sixth chapter addresses the question of adolescent conversion revising the current assumption that most Jewish converts were adolescent males Finally the seventh chapter examines the changing attitudes toward and treatment of Jewish converts and returning converts in the twelfth century
