

Christian philosophy in John Deely's Four ages of understanding

GREGORY B. SADLER

Abstract

The Four ages contains a brief explicit discussion of the issue of Christian philosophy, referencing the Middle Ages and the 1930s French debates about Christian philosophy. Closer attention to the debates reveals a plurality of positions rather than unanimous agreement on Christian philosophy, indicating that the quite complex issues were not resolved. In this review article, I contest Deely's interpretation of Maritain's position, provide an excerpt of Maritain's position, argue that Deely's explicit position is identifiable as very close to Neo-Scholastic opponents of Christian philosophy during the debates, and briefly discuss Gilson's and Blondel's criticisms of each position articulated during the 1930s debates. I also indicate that despite his opposition to Christian philosophy, Deely shares several key insights with its proponents, and I end by suggesting but not developing a few ways Deely's sensuous approach could bear additional fruits for postmodern Christian philosophy's ongoing projects of self-understanding.

Keywords: Christian philosophy; Maritain; Gilson; Blondel; Medieval philosophy; 1930s debates.

1. Four ages on Christian philosophy

In his recent book's preface, John Deely reveals a set of motivations for offering it, motivations including an intent to provoke; to provoke reconsideration and re-evaluation of long-traditional but reductive, even erroneous, historical classifications of philosophies and philosophers; to provoke renewed philosophical attention to the inescapable importance of the sign, not only in and to a postmodern age of culture and thought to which there is a "recovery and advance of the notion" (2001: xxx), but to the preceding history of the earlier three ages; and, to provoke further

The Mirror of Language (Revised Edition) Marcia L. Colish, 1983-01-01 Early Christianity faced the problem of the human word versus Christ the Word Could language accurately describe spiritual reality The Mirror of Language brilliantly traces the development of one prominent theory of signs from Augustine through Anselm of Canterbury Thomas Aquinas and Dante Their shared epistemology validated human language as an authentic but limited index of preexistent reality both material and spiritual This sign theory could thereby account for the ways men receive know and transmit religious knowledge always mediated through faith Marcia L Colish demonstrates how the three theologians used different branches of the medieval trivium to express a common sign theory Augustine stressed rhetoric Anselm shifted to grammar including grammatical proofs of God s existence and Thomas Aquinas stressed dialectic Dante the one poet included in this study used the Augustinian sign theory to develop a Christian poetics that culminates in the Divine Comedy The author points out not only the commonality but also the sharp contrasts between these writers and shows the relation between their sign theories and the intellectual ferment of the times When first published in 1968 The Mirror of Language was recognized as a pathfinding study This completely revised edition incorporates the scholarship of the intervening years and reflects the refinements of the author s thought Greater prominence is given to the role of Stoicism and sharper attention is paid to some of the thinkers and movements surrounding the major thinkers treated Concerns of semiotics philosophy and literary criticism are elucidated further The original thesis still controversial is now even wider ranging and more salient to current intellectual debate
