Dictionary of Marxism David Walker, Daniel Gray, 2007 Marxism one of the few philosophies that turned into an effective movement not so long ago was the official ideology in one form or another of much of humanity It was promulgated initially by the Soviet Union then imposed on much of Central and Eastern Europe later emerged in the People's Republic of China and gradually spread to other parts of Asia and even bits of Africa and Latin America Although declining in its initial popularity it still remains strong in several countries and is supported by numerous communist and other parties and countless individuals around the world The Historical Dictionary of Marxism covers the history of Marxism and all its thinkers and schools of thought in a comprehensive manner This is done through a chronology a list of acronyms and abbreviations an introductory essay a bibliography and hundreds of cross reference dictionary entries on basic terms and concepts significant thinkers and doers and also the parties and countries that followed it

George Grant and the Twilight of Justice Joan O'Donovan, 1984-12 Modern men regard themselves as essentially historical beings who are free to make themselves and their world through the power of modern science and technology In these conceptions of history and freedom which dominate modern thinking lies a dilemma Joan O'Donovan explores George Grant's thought about this dilemma and the possibilities of political action and reflection in our age She finds that Grant regards man's historical self consciousness at the basis of the crisis in the public realm for it excludes the formative Western traditions of freedom and justice which are rooted in Biblical Christianity and Greek philosophy The problem posed for political philosophy today by the eclipse of this Western heritage is the controlling problem of history in Grant's work The author examines the various phases of Grant's formulation of the problem of history over several decades in light of his intellectual influences and public involvements She shows how his early patriotic and conservative allegiances give way in the 50s to a concern with recovering the Western tradition of freedom in its theological and philosophical unity and how this concern receives its most optimistic statement in the cautious Hegelianism of Philosophy in the Mass Age 1959 She looks at the dissolution of Grant's liberal synthesis under the impact of the writings of Leo Strauss and interprets the ironies and ambiguities of Grant's pessimism in the essays of Technology and Empire 1969 and English Speaking Justice 1974 which were inspired by his reading of Nietzsche and Heidegger and draws out the elements of his tragic historical vision Finally she subjects Grant's thinking about history to theological criticism setting out some theoretical alternatives to historicism within Christian political thought
