Creede, Colorado History-- Charles Armon Harbert, History of Arvada, 2016-05-15 History of Arvada A Photo Journey relates historical details of Arvada Colorado as shown in photographs arranged in a path around the city The pathway begins at the heart of the city along the property line of founding settlers Benjamin Wadsworth and Louis Reno The book is not a comprehensive history but small bits of history pieced together along a trail that weaves through space and time The reader first travels through Olde Town Arvada and views the business center as it developed from the late 1800s Some stories overlap and some highlight local residents One early entrepreneur built an entire block section by section over a decade to produce what appears to be one long building of red orange brick Each building holds the history of what happened within its walls The first bank in town is still a bank The oldest building still standing built as a grange later rocked to tunes as a teen dance hangout A few walls witnessed murder or robberies Some walls fell in flames As the route circles the city the outline of the foothills brings local folklore to mind There are visits to truck farms and homesteads as well as one of the first schoolhouses in the Territory of Colorado Trains street cars and buses all play a part in the growth and the changing times of the town The cover features the Arvada Flour Mill a business that played an important role in the agricultural community and is on the National Register of Historic Places The old mill now houses a museum preserving history of the area Building facades may have changed and the businesses within those buildings may have sold closed or moved down the street but the original form of the structures the bones of the town can be seen throughout Olde Town giving this city a charm and spirit which goes back to its beginning Enjoy the journey through time while exploring the byways of the town of Arvada as it grew into a city
