

Keep these tips in mind when contacting a prospect, whether on the phone or through email, if you want your outreach to be as specific and effective as possible:

- Personalize. Reference a specific problem that the prospect is encountering with a specific solution.
- Stay relevant and timely. Ensure the issue a prospect is trying to solve is still relevant to them and their team.
- Be human. No one likes to communicate with a professional robot. Adding in details like wishing someone a happy holiday weekend or conveying how awesome their company's product is are real touches that allow us to establish a connection on a deeper level.
- Help, don't sell. Provide value and ask for nothing in return. This process isn't about us, it's about them. For example, instead of scheduling a follow-up meeting, you could offer to conduct an audit on their digital media presence and get back to them with your findings in a week.
- Keep it casual. Remember that this is just a conversation. Stay natural and as not sales-y as possible. The key to prospecting is that we're never selling. We're simply determining if both parties could mutually benefit from a relationship.
