Physical illness cannot be effectively treated other than in the context of the psychological factors with which it is associated The body may have the disease but it is the patient who is ill Research psychologists from a number of different backgrounds have in the past few decades turned increasingly to the study of physical illness and there is now an extensive literature on preventive behaviors the role of stress in the etiology of illness the patient's reactions to illness and its treatment and the physician patient relationship At the same time practicing clinical psychologists have extended their concern beyond the treatment of specifically psychiatric disorders to include also the psychological care of people experiencing distress through illness or injury Traditionally these patients have tended to fall through the net unless their distress is so great that it assumes the proportion of a psychiatric disorder that can then be treated in its own right Because the physical disorder is the primary one its existence has detracted from the salience of the very real emotional disturbance to which it can give rise Moreover emotional reactions in this setting being the norm seems to have been regarded as not meriting special attention and care This situation is changing and it is not just psychologists or psychiatrists who are responsible for the shift in attitudes Within general medicine itself there is now a renewed emphasis on the care of the whole patient and not just the disease

Handbook of Clinical Psychology in Medical Settings Ronald H. Rozensky, Jerry J. Sweet, Steven M. Tavian, 2013-06-29

For two decades I have been responding to questions about the nature of health psychology and how it differs from medical psychology behavioral medicine and clinical psychology From the beginning I have taken the position that any application of psychological theory or practice to problems and issues of the health system is health psychology I have repeatedly used an analogy to Newell and Simon's General Problem Solver program of the late 1950s and early 1960s which had two major functional parts in addition to the executive component One was the problem solving core the procedural competence the other was the representation of the problem environment In the analogy the concepts knowledge and techniques of psychology constitute the core competence the health system in all its complexity is the problem environment A health psychologist is one whose basic competence in psychology is augmented by a working knowledge of some aspect of the health system Quite apparently there are functionally distinct aspects of health psychology to the degree that there are meaningful subdivisions in psychological competence and significantly different microenvironments within the health system I hesitate to refer to them as areas of specialization as the man who gave health psychology its formal definition Joseph Matarazzo has said that there are no specialties in psychology cited in the editors preface to this book
