

How are radioactive drugs and imaging devices used to diagnose diseases?

1 Radiopharmaceutical Creation

Radioactive drugs, or radiopharmaceuticals, can be made by combining a radioactive compound that emits gamma rays, a tailored targeting molecule that varies to address specific organs or tissues, and a linker which ensures stable attachment.

2 Administration into the Body

Patients receive the radiopharmaceutical through injection or ingestion. The method is selected based on the targeted organ or system.

3 Targeted Localization in Tumour

Guided by the specific targeting molecule, the radiopharmaceutical seeks out areas with heightened metabolic activity, often indicative of a tumour or diseased tissue.

This targeted localization minimizes exposure to healthy cells and maximize the diagnostic accuracy.

4 More Gamma Rays Emitted by Cancerous Cells

As the radiopharmaceutical accumulates in the targeted tumour, the radioactive compound emits gamma rays.

Cancer cells absorb more of the compound than normal cells and so emit more gamma rays as it decays.

5 Imaging with Specialized Devices

Imaging devices, such as gamma cameras and PET scanners, capture the emitted gamma rays, converting them into detailed images.

6 Interpretation and Diagnosis

Radiologists and nuclear medicine specialists interpret the obtained images to diagnose, locate abnormal cells and extent of diseases, facilitating accurate diagnosis.

Understanding the journey of radiopharmaceuticals within the body is pivotal for detection of diseases, especially cancers, at an early and treatable stage.
