for Economic Evaluations of New Interventions; a Framework Ralph K. Davidson, A framework for economic evaluations of new interventions for the control of Chagas disease depends upon the comparison to be made interventions in different sectors within the same sector or for a given objective in the control of a single disease For comparisons between sectors the relevant framework is that of cost benefit analysis but there are difficulties in measuring the benefits in the health sector Within the health sector the suggested comparison is between the present values of streams of costs and discounted productive years of healthy life saved by different interventions The nature of the transmission of Chagas disease is such as to suggest that the comparison should be between the present values of streams of costs to achieve a given objective in each year. The relevant cost concept is that of social opportunity cost and the preferred comparison is between present values of streams of costs corrected for overvalued exchange rates, market distortions and inflation. WHO Report on Neglected Tropical Diseases World Health Organization, 2010. Neglected tropical diseases (NTDs) blight the lives of a billion people worldwide and threaten the health of millions more. These ancient companions of poverty weaken impoverished populations, frustrate the achievement of health in the Millennium Development Goals and impede global health and economies. This has convinced governments, donors, the pharmaceutical industry and other agencies, including nongovernmental organizations (NGOs), to invest in preventing and controlling this diverse group of diseases. Global efforts to control hidden diseases such as dracunculiasis, guinea worm disease, leprosy, and gains including the imminent eradication of dracunculiasis. Since 1989, when most endemic countries began reporting monthly from each endemic village, the number of new dracunculiasis cases has fallen from 892,055 in 12 endemic countries to 3190 in 4 countries in 2009, a decrease of more than 99%. The World Health Organization (WHO) recommends five public health strategies for the prevention and control of NTDs: preventive chemotherapy, intensified case management, vector control, the provision of safe water, sanitation and hygiene, and veterinary public health, that is, applying veterinary sciences to ensure the health and well-being of humans.
