

FIVE TOOLS CONGRESS CAN USE TO CONTROL SPENDING

1. Control Appropriations

President Trump's Fiscal Year 2026 discretionary budget request would save $1.8 trillion over the next decade. Congress should use the appropriations process to end funding for left-wing institutions until there are substantial reforms to ensure these groups are working on behalf of the American people.

2. Reduce Federal Employment

Reducing the federal workforce by 10% over a three-year period would save between $559 and $608 billion over the next decade.

3. Review Authorizations

While the Appropriations Committee takes the lead in reducing the funds provided to woke and wasteful agencies, the Congressional authorizing Committees have an important role to play as well.

4. Implement Rescissions

At the end of April 2025, federal agencies had $1.4 trillion unobligated balances of discretionary budget authority that could be rescinded. DOGE has already identified billions in waste, fraud, and abuse of the taxpayers' money. Rescinding unneeded and harmful appropriations is the natural next step.

5. Utilize Reconciliation

Autopilot spending programs, which are the driver of the unsustainability of the budget, can be adjusted in the reconciliation process. The House deserves credit for its One Big Beautiful Bill that would reduce outlays by $1.25 trillion, including $1.5 trillion in savings which are offset by $297 billion of investments in border security and national defense.

Congressional Record United States. Congress, 1982 The Federal Budget Process, V.2 Bill Heniff Jr., Robert Keith, Megan Lynch, 2018-06-20

Budgeting for the federal government is an enormously complex process. It entails dozens of subprocesses, countless rules and procedures, the efforts of tens of thousands of staff persons in the executive and legislative branches, and the active participation of the President, congressional leaders, Members of Congress, and members of the executive branch. This analysis shows the various elements of the federal budget process, including the President's budget submission framework, timetable, the budget resolution, reconciliation, the Byrd Rule, appropriations, authorizations, and budget execution. Congress is distinguished from nearly every other legislature in the world by the control it exercises over fashioning the government's budgetary policies. This power, referred to as the power of the purse, ensures Congress's primary role in setting revenue and borrowing policies for the federal government and in determining how these resources are spent. The congressional power of the purse derives from several key provisions in the Constitution: Article I, Section 8, Clause 1 (Power to tax and spend) declares in part that Congress shall have the power to raise that is to lay and collect revenues of various types, including taxes and duties, among other things; Article I, Section 8, Clause 2 (Borrowing power) declares that the power to borrow funds on the credit of the United States belongs to Congress. In addition to its powers regarding revenues and borrowing, Congress exerts control over the expenditure of funds. Article I, Section 9, Clause 7 declares in part that funds can be withdrawn from the Treasury only pursuant to laws that make appropriations. Under the Constitution, revenue measures must originate in the House of Representatives. Beyond this requirement, however, the Constitution does not prescribe how the House and Senate should organize themselves or the procedures they should use to conduct budgeting. Over the years, however, both chambers have developed an extensive set of rules, some set forth in statute and precedents that lay out complicated multiple processes for making budgetary decisions. The House and Senate have also created an intricate committee system to support these processes. As American society has grown and become ever more complex, and as the role of the federal government in the national economy has steadily expanded, Congress also has increasingly shared power over budgetary matters with the president and the executive branch. It has refashioned the president's role in budgeting by requiring him to submit to Congress each year a budget for the entire federal government and giving him responsibilities for monitoring agencies' implementation of spending and revenue laws. Accordingly, the president also exercises considerable influence over key budget decisions.
