Immigrants have some common experiences that include uncertainty, fear and hope. Literatures on immigrants are mostly about racism, separation, and fraud. Caribbean fiction stories also draw ideas from this perspective writing about immigrants. Some of the ideas in Caribbean short stories are about local dialect, trade, culture and racial tensions between Northern and Southern worlds.

Individuals across the globe recognize these pieces of writing. The reason is that the stories are accessible and parallel to the lives of immigrants around the globe. This paper critically summarizes and analyzes the Caribbean story "Chutney" by Persaud Sasenarine. The author is a poet, novelist and short story writer born in Guyana. In this book, he is depicted to be a narrator and protagonist of the Indian culture.

The author has chosen to explore his ideas with long narratives. For example, the narrative of Guyana is a fiction story that explains the emotions of Guyanese people expected to migrate to North America. He continues to say that these individuals have often moved to the urban places, like Miami, New York and Toronto.

Unfamiliarity with the western culture and lack of connection to new homes forced the migrants to find ways of belonging. For example, they chose to make chutney from green apples rather than from traditional mangos. This kept them away from staying idle in public parks. This commonality is also used to describe the poor Geese originating from Canada.

The opening sections of "The dog" shows the sentiment of bewilderment. The dog is characterized as a spiritual family pet. It also brings out the different cultural relationships with animals. The use of other term to refer to the migrants shows that the author embraces philosophical orientations with deep fascination. It is also correct to say that the narratives are not overwhelming.

There is no complete story that appears real apart from "dookie". It is a romantic tale between a Hindu boy and Muslim girl. A film with the same name also explains the westernization of the Hindu culture related to feminism. In the recent days, the Brahmin
