Force in World War I incorporated the mapleleaf into their design and the Canadians who fought in Europe under a British flag returned home with a newly minted sense of national identity made material by the maple leaf emblems they d worn into battle Parliament s first two attempts to establish a distinct Canadian flag in 1925 and 1946 ended in stalemate and it was not until 1964 when the nation was almost a century old that Prime Minister Lester Pearson dared to inaugurate the political debate that would decide the issue The entire country got into the fight and the flag threatened to divide the country instead of bringing it together In desperation Pearson agreed to turn the decision over to an all party committee which considered several thousand possible designs including offerings from the Group of Seven s A J Casson and A Y Jackson After the longest debate in Canadian parliamentary history the House of Commons voted to adopt the flag committee s surprisingly successful compromise On February 15 1965 Canada s official flag was raised for the first time on Parliament Hill In the 37 years since the maple leaf flag has become our symbol of national pride the unique and perfect Canadian logo and Canadians for all their supposed reticence have become a nation of exuberant flag wavers I Stand for Canada is the first comprehensive work on the origins evolution political history and cultural significance of Canada s flag one that combines rare archival illustrations and stunning contemporary images with a richly detailed and engaging narrative Canada's 1960s Bryan D.
