Department of National Defence, 1979 Canadair CF104 Starfighter Anthony L. Stachiw, Andrew Tattersall, 2007 In the late 1950s the RCAF was faced with a decision on the replacement of the Canadair F 86 Sabre Mk 6 and the Avro Canada CF 100 Canuck which equipped the twelve squadrons in the 1 Air Division serving with NATO forces in Europe Canada was being pressured by NATO to undertake a nuclear strike role as part of the limited nuclear warfare policy being implemented at the time In July 1959 the Canadian Government announced the selection of a Canadian built version of the F 104G Starfighter to fulfill that commitment Soon after the government announced that the aircraft would be manufactured by Canadair Ltd at Cartierville Quebec in the Montreal area while Orenda Ltd at Malton Ontario would manufacture the J79 engines under licence from General Electric The Starfighter served with eight squadrons

in the Air Division in Europe six of which were tasked with the tactical nuclear strike role while the remaining two performed photo reconnaissance duties In the 1970s the nuclear strike role was abandoned and the formation was progressively reduced to three squadrons The remaining Starfighters were equipped with cannon and conventional weapons for a ground support role In the mid 1980s after some twenty five years of service the Starfighter was replaced by the McDonnell Douglas CF 18 Hornet aircraft REVIEWS describes the planes in great detail including all variations armament squadron service and going down into such details as paint schemes The use of the CF 104 in Canada was quite successful lasting twenty five years covers the first plane and the last It is profusely illustrated with mostly black and white but quite a few color photos Books OnLine 05 2008 provides all the background enthusiasts need to understand how the Starfighter worked and how it was eventually adapted to conventional warfare and intelligence military based technical illustrator Tattersall gives inch by inch graphics Together they give aviation buffs a full range of data on design operational history variants and armaments including a wealth of full color photos suitable for model makers SciTech Book News 06 2008 Cold War Fighters Randall Wakelam,2011-11-03 The cancellation of the CF 105 Arrow in 1959 holds such a grip on the imagination of Canadians that earlier developments in defence procurement remain in the shadows Randall Wakelam corrects this oversight and offers fresh insight into the AVRO saga and contemporary procurement issues by detailing the complexities Canada s air force faced in buying fighter aircraft and by showing how the RCAF grew by leaps and bounds Wakelam shows that cabinet members chiefs of staff and air marshals were forced to negotiate competing pressures to arm the air force please allies and save money Their decisions resulted in the CF 100 Canuck and the F 86 Sabre Canada s front line defensive aircraft in the coldest years of the Cold War Although historians assume that the Arrow arrived on the heels of these successes Wakelam reveals that neither the air force nor the government believed AVRO could manufacture even the CF 100 on budget
