Housing and Planning References, 1982 A Method to Assess the Implications of Future Urban Expansion on Rural Land Chris Cocklin, Canada. Lands Directorate, Barry Smit, Canada Land Use Monitoring Program, 1982 In Canada as elsewhere there has been an outward expansion of urban centres in order to accommodate the land demands for urban activities A variety of resource conflicts have arisen as a result one of the most actively discussed in recent times being the development for urban uses of land with high capability for renewable uses While there have been numerous studies undertaken in an effort to estimate the extent and rate of conversions of rural land especially agricultural land to urban land uses there has been much less attention devoted to estimating the extent and possible implications of future land conversions In this report an approach to estimating future rural to urban land conversions is described and a method to assess the implications of land conversions in terms of the land resource for rural land use activities is developed A pilot study implemented to assess the implications of future land conversions for agriculture in Ontario provides an illustration of the approaches described Abstract

The Rural Richard Munton, 2017-05-15 The rural has long been regarded as an important site of geographical inquiry even if our understanding of it has not always been treated as conceptually different from the urban. That said, rural research has pursued a number of distinct empirical agendas ranging from the operation and impacts of agribusiness to local resistance to global food supply chains to differing representations of the rural. In doing so, rural geographers have critically examined the relevance and significance of ideas drawn from numerous traditions including political economy, ecological modernization and cultural theory, amending them as appropriate in their search to understand the nature and trajectory of rural areas. Up until the 1980s, attention remained largely focused upon agriculture as the primary land use, but increasingly new forms of rural consumption, housing, recreation, nature conservation have taken centre stage as the primacy of local agriculture has been undermined by reduced state protection and new rural populations which have migrated out from the city. More recently, research has been dominated by the cultural turn with particular emphases upon society-nature relations, interpretations of landscape, marginalised others and analyses of the relations between representation and practice. In the last decade, a more holistic view of the rural, bringing together different aspects of the two previous themes, has emerged through more politically oriented studies of rural governance concerned with the functioning of interest groups, participation, protest and the allocation and management of resources. The volume is thus structured into three sections concerned with agriculture and food, the rural and rural governance. The great majority of the selected papers combine both empirical material, often highly informative case studies, and important conceptual arguments about change in the rural condition that can be linked to ideas being employed elsewhere in Geography and the Social Sciences more generally. These critical reflections have been drawn very largely from research conducted in advanced economies which at least provide some commonality of experience, allowing the transfer of ideas between what otherwise might be seen as very differing geographical contexts.

Canadiana, 1981-06      The Canadian Urban System G. Lewis, York University (Toronto, Ont.). Department of Geography, 1996      The State of Canada's Environment, 1991. Second national state of the environment report addressing the questions of what is happening in Canada's environment, why it is happening, why it is significant and what Canadians are doing about it. The report is divided into five parts dealing with perceptions of the environment and the dangers inherent in our tendency to look at the world in terms of human economic models, exploring the state of particular environmental components and the major sectors of human activity, describing six regional case studies addressing six important environmental issues and discussing the concept of sustainable development and its implications for Canada's future.
