

Promoting Learning and Development in K-12 Out-of-School Time Settings

Proceedings of a Workshop—in Brief

The National Academies of Sciences, Engineering, and Medicine convened an ad-hoc committee to examine learning and development in out-of-school time (OST) settings across the K-12 age span. The committee's review is focused on students from low-income households across urban, suburban, and rural settings. It is also tasked with attending to issues of intersectionality of economic stress with other factors that have operated historically to marginalize young people; such as gender, sexual orientation, race, age, disability, and involvement with justice or child welfare systems, among others. To inform its deliberations, the committee held three public sessions, on October 19, 2023, February 8, 2024, and April 18, 2024. During the October 2023 session, speakers shared how state, local, and federal policymaking supports and facilitates access and opportunities to OST programming for children and youth from low-income households. Speakers also discussed the state of research and practice pertaining to quality of OST programming and capacity building efforts for youth-serving professionals (see Box 1 for key issues). In the February and April sessions, the committee heard from young people about their experiences in afterschool programs and from program staff supporting these experiences. OST program staff also shared their experiences and perspectives on professional pathways within the OST field.

OUT-OF-SCHOOL TIME PROGRAMMING: PERSPECTIVES ON POLICY, ACCESS, AND QUALITY State and Local Perspectives

Michael Funk, Director of the Expanded Learning Division¹ in the California Department of Education, discussed the concept of expanded learning, as defined in California's Code of Education, as including after-school programs, before-school programs, and summer programs along with general OST time. The term "expanded learning" is used to clarify that these programs do not just extend what is happening during the school day, but rather expand and build on the in-school programming.

In 2024, California's Expanded Learning Opportunities Program offers programming at every charter school and local educational agency in the state—except for high school-only districts. The state's programs were designed with intentionality and structure around a robust expanded learning ecosystem, with students and families at the center.

A key priority, Funk noted, is building an infrastructure to support quality. The Quality Standards for Expanded Learning in California,² which guide quality assessments,
