Derry In Old Photographs:

Around Derry in Old Photographs Maura Craig, 2010-07-06 Derry is one of Ireland's most historic walled cities. It is also renowned for its picturesque location straddling the River Foyle and having as its backdrop the magnificent Donegal Hills. Having withstood three sieges in the seventeenth century, today its walls remain intact and add to the uniqueness of Derry's heritage. Within the pages of this book, the city's rich history and heritage, its social and economic development are chronicled in often poignant pictures. Added to all this is the often controversial political image which Derry has projected over the years. This book will evoke cherished memories as it captures for ever the changing face of this beautiful city over the years.

Derry in Old Photographs Art Byrne, Seán McMahon, 2003 This collection of photographs is a chronicle of social life in Derry from 1890s to the modern day. The main emphasis is on the period 1940 to 1980. The book recalls the town's commercial, sporting and artistic life with nostalgia and affection. The famous walled plantation town occupies the site of a sixth-century Columban monastery. A town grew up around the monastery and by the 13th century Derry was a diocesan centre. But its modern history dates from the 17th century. Its history echoes that of Ulster in general. The Protestant plantation town withstood the famous Jacobite siege of 1689; thereafter it stood as a symbol of Protestant defiance while gradually attracting a Catholic population to areas outside the walls like the Bogside. History that which tended to unite rather than divide is less often celebrated. That is what this book does in pictures. The earliest image dates from 1872 but most of the material covers the years from the 1930s to the 1960s. These glimpses of the city's past and of the people who made it embrace commercial life, sport, music for which the city is justly famous and the other aspects of the ordinary daily round. It also records the dreadful poverty of old as well as the embittered politics. Art Byrne and Sean McMahon have assembled a wide selection of images, all of them drawn from private sources and most of them never seen before in print.
