ABSTRACT

Library and information science professions are very challenging and at the same time exciting future. The working environment is becoming more and more complex with constant change in the organizational, technological and information environment. Professionals have to keep up to date with new forms of information, information media and information sources, new technologies and systems, and new tasks and roles. They have to navigate with the complex environment of social, political and cultural situations, which is often in the turmoil of restructuring. They also have to constantly justify themselves and their services, and demonstrate their value to the parent organization. This paper reviews the challenges in professional values and ethics in librarianship and the competencies, skills, knowledge and attitudes needed by college librarians to survive and flourish in the digital era.

KEYWORDS: Librarianship, Profession, Values, Ethics.

1. INTRODUCTION

Most of the professions today are under tremendous pressures due to the application of various kinds of technologies and societal changes. The profession of librarianship is not excluding under such pressures. In recent decades, the dimensions of library and information science have widened, with the application of information and communication technology, rapidly expanding information needs of users, unprecedented increase in the volume and variety of information packages and societal changes. At present no library is self sufficient because of user's versatile need and information explosion. Recent developments in the field of librarianship create new problems and issues that are often creating conflicting approaches in setting ethical standards in professional performance. To understand properly, following are some technical words and their meanings relating to professional ethics.

Ethics: The general meaning of ethics is that it is a set of moral principles. These may be rules of conduct recognized with respect to a particular class of human actions or a particular group, culture, etc.¹
