Abstract A person's cultural background influences the experience and expression of emotions. In reviewing the recent literature on cross-cultural aspects of anxiety disorders, we identified some culturally related ethnopsychology/ethnophysiology factors (the culture's conceptualizations of how the mind and body function) and contextual factors that influence anxiety disorders. Ethnopsychology/ethnophysiology factors include the person's ideas about the mental and bodily processes (and their interaction), whereas contextual factors are associated with the social norms and rules that may contribute to anxiety, including individualism vs. collectivism and self-construals. From the perspective of ethnopsychology/ethnophysiology and contextual factors, we will discuss "khyâl cap" ("wind attacks"), taijin kyofusho, and ataques de nervios, three prominent examples of culture-specific expressions of anxiety disorders that have all been included in the DSM-5 list of cultural concepts of distress.

Introduction

Anxiety disorders are some of the most prevalent mental disorders [1]. These disorders are strongly influenced by ethnic, racial, and cultural factors, in part because of culturally dependent variations in the beliefs about the underlying physiology of the illness syndromes [2•] and the social context and norms to which a person is exposed [3•].

For the following discussion, we use the term "race" to describe the broad differentiations based on physiognomy (e.g., White), the term "ethnicity" for "common descent" and affiliation with a historically continuous community (e.g., Latino), and the term "culture" to describe social groups with specific or homogeneous attributes. In this article, we will primarily concentrate on culture and anxiety disorders. Specifically, we will examine the ethnopsychology/ethnophysiology and contextual factors that contribute to the cultural variations in the experience and expression of anxiety.

Prevalence of Anxiety Disorder in Different Cultural Groups

A direct comparison of prevalence rates between different cultures is difficult because of differences in language, assessment instruments, political, geographic, and sociodemographic contexts. A more meaningful estimate of the difference in prevalence rates between different cultural groups may be derived by comparing these groups within the same, multicultural country. One such study assessed the prevalence rates of anxiety disorders within a large representative sample of the US population, while over-sampling of Hispanic Americans ($N=3,615$), Asian Americans ($N=1,628$), and African Americans ($N=4,598$) to counter the methodological problems of unequal sample sizes typically encountered with research on minority racial groups [4•]. The results showed that Asian Americans consistently endorsed symptoms of all four major anxiety disorders (social anxiety disorder, generalized anxiety disorder, panic disorder, and post-traumatic stress disorder) less frequently than any of the other racial groups. White Americans ($N=6,870$) consistently

Adopting the Tune of Phrase: An Psychological Symphony within Cross Cultural Anxiety

In a global used by monitors and the ceaseless chatter of fast interaction, the melodic splendor and emotional symphony created by the published term often fade into the background, eclipsed by the constant sound and disturbances that permeate our lives. But, located within the pages of Cross Cultural Anxiety an enchanting literary value full of fresh emotions, lies an immersive symphony waiting to be embraced. Crafted by a wonderful composer of language, this interesting masterpiece conducts readers on a psychological trip, well unraveling the hidden tunes and profound influence resonating within each carefully constructed phrase. Within the depths with this poignant assessment, we shall investigate the book is key harmonies, analyze their enthralling writing design, and surrender ourselves to the profound resonance that echoes in the depths of readers souls.
