Automating Linguistics Jacqueline Léon, 2021-04-26. Automating Linguistics offers an in-depth study of the history of the mathematization and automation of the sciences of language. In the wake of the first mathematization of the 1930s, two waves followed: machine translation in the 1950s and the development of computational linguistics and natural language processing in the 1960s. These waves were pivotal given the work of large computerized corpora in the 1990s and the unprecedented technological development of computers and software. Early machine translation was devised as a war technology originating in the sciences of war amidst the amalgam of mathematics, physics, logics, neurosciences, acoustics, and emerging sciences such as cybernetics and information theory. Machine translation was intended to provide mass translations for strategic purposes during the Cold War. Linguistics, in turn, did not belong to the sciences of war and played a minor role in the pioneering projects of machine translation. Comparing the two trends, the present book reveals how the sciences of language gradually integrated the technologies of computing and software, resulting in the second wave of mathematization of the study of language, which may be called mathematization automation. The integration took on various shapes contingent upon cultural and linguistic traditions: USA ex USSR, Great Britain, and France. By contrast, working with large corpora in the 1990s, though enabled by unprecedented development of computing and software, was primarily a continuation of traditional approaches in the sciences of language, such as the study of spoken and written texts, lexicography, and statistical studies of vocabulary.
