

actually it is a case of perception. To avoid this difficulty the Naiyyayikas said that inferential cognition results from paramartha accompanied by pakata. The absence of certainty that is accompanied by the absence of desire to infer is called pakata. If there is certainty that the saffiya is in the pakata, then inferential cognition does not arise. So, the certain knowledge of saffiya is a but to arise inferential cognition. But in that case also inferential cognition may arise if there is the desire to infer. The desire to infer is here the stimulus (उत्प्रेक्षा). Thus the absence of certainty that is accompanied by the absence of the desire to infer is a causal condition for inferential cognition. It is described as pakata. In the case of samanyartham-pratyaksha, though the absence of certainty is present, there is also present the desire to infer. This is not a case where there is the absence of certainty that is accompanied by the absence of the desire to infer. So, we cannot say that samanyartham-pratyaksha results from paramartha accompanied by pakata.

Inference may be of two types- svarthamumana and pararthamumana. Svarthamumana is inference for one's own good and pararthamumana is inference for others.

Naiyyayikas accepted upamāna as another source of knowledge. After looking the similarity between a name and a thing, or named or between a word and its denotatum we may achieve some knowledge. This is upamāna. The special condition of upamāna is upamāna. Upamāna is described as the relation between between a term and what it signified. "For example, a man who does not know what a gavaya or wild cow is, may be told by a forester that it is an animal like a cow. If subsequently he happens to meet with such an animal in the forest and knows or recognizes it as a gavaya, then his knowledge will be due to upamāna or comparison." (Chandrabhatta Chaturvedi and Dharmadranth Datta, 1984).

Naiyyayikas have accepted shabda as another source of knowledge. Shabda means words of most worthy persons. "Aparivrajanti validh. Aparita yathartham validh." (Anandabhatta-Tarkasamgraha , sūtra 46). A trustworthy person is one who always speaks the truth. In other words, he always speaks correct statement. A trustworthy person is such type of person who is free from illusion, anarthamumana, defects of some organs, desire of cheating others.

In conclusion , it can be said that the Nyaya theory of prama and pramāna is relevant even today . From the opinions of Naiyyayikas we can clearly know about the sources of valid knowledge and nature of valid knowledge. naiyyayikas said that we can attain valid knowledge from four sources which are perception, inference, analogy and verbal testimony. Everybody accepts that we attain valid knowledge by perception. We must have to accept inference as another source of knowledge because without inference we cannot pass our day-to-day life. Comparison also helps us to attain some valid knowledge. Again we may achieve many valid knowledge by the words of trustworthy persons. So, we should have to accept these four pramāna.

Here we should remember that in western philosophy, knowledge is divided into two kinds- direct or immediate cognition and indirect or mediate cognition. But the Naiyyayikas divided knowledge into umata and umadhara. So, there is a difference between the views of western philosophers and Naiyyayikas. The Naiyyayikas said that both direct and indirect cognitions come under umadhara. Perception is direct cognition and inference, analogy and testimony are indirect cognitions.

The Naiyyayikas said that knowledge is an adventitious property of the soul which is produced when the soul comes in contact with the non-soul. "Correspondence with the object is the nature of truth." (Chandrabhatta Sharma, 1980). Pravritisanuvada is the criterion of validity and pravritishapuvada is the criterion invalidity, i.e. valid knowledge corresponds to its object and invalid knowledge does not correspond to its object. Successful activity is the criterion of truth. Truth is correspondence of knowledge with reality and error is disagreement of knowledge with reality. Truth or falsity of knowledge consists negatively in its correspondence and non-correspondence to facts. By saying something as "vagar" if there arises the taste of sweetness, then the cognition is valid and if there does not arise the taste of sweetness, then the cognition is invalid. Thus we find the relevancy of Nyaya theory of knowledge in our practical life.
