Forthcoming Books Rose Arny, 1998-04 Southern California Coastal Water Research Project Annual Report Southern California Coastal Water Research Project, 2010 A Review of Literature on the Removal of Microbial Contaminants from Drinking Water Hongde Zhou, Northern River Basins Study (Canada), Daniel W. Smith, Stephen John Stanley, 1996. This report reviews the various water treatment technologies available to remove micro organisms from raw water supplies. Discussions of each technology include a process overview, performance information, design considerations, operating and maintenance aspects, and notes on costs and status of technology development. In addition, the impacts of important micro organisms and relevant regulations are examined to highlight the significance and requirements of removing micro organisms from water treatment processes. Specific consideration is made regarding those technologies suitable for small community systems located in the Northern River Basins Study area. Types of technologies examined include pre filtration processes such as coagulation and sedimentation, filtration and disinfection. Three types of package plants: conventional, tube type clarification and adsorption clarifier, suitable for small communities, are also reviewed.
