

Marx's Critique of Heaven and Critique of Earth

JOHN BELLAMY FOSTER, BRETT CLARK, AND RICHARD YORK

In recent years the intelligent design movement, or creationism in a more subtle guise, has expanded the attack on the teaching of evolution in U.S. public schools, while promoting an ambitious "Wedge strategy" aimed at transforming both science and culture throughout society. As explained in our book Critique of Intelligent Design: Materialism versus Creationism from Antiquity to the Present (Monthly Review Press, 2008), this has reignited a 2,500-year debate between materialism and creationism, science and design. The argument from design (the attempt to discern evidence of design in nature, thereby the existence of a Designer) can be dated back to Socrates in the fifth century BCE. While the opposing materialist view (that the world is explained in terms of itself, by reference to material conditions, natural laws, and contingent, emergent phenomena, and not by the invocation of the supernatural) to which Socrates was responding also dates back to the fifth century BCE in the writings of the atomists Leucippus and Democritus. The latter perspective was developed philosophically into a full-fledged critique of design by Epicurus in the third century BCE, which later influenced the scientific revolution of the seventeenth century.

Today's intelligent design proponents like William Dembski, senior fellow of the Seattle-based Discovery Institute's Center for Science and Culture, continually affirm that the philosophical foundations of the materialist views they oppose can be traced back to Epicurus in antiquity ("all roads," Dembski observes, echoing Epicurus's first century BCE Roman follower Lucretius, "lead to Epicurus and the train of thought he set in motion"). However, the three greatest materialist enemies of design in modern times are said to be Darwin, Marx, and Freud. It was Darwin who in a critique first used the term "intelligent design" in its modern sense, while Marx and Freud both developed materialist critiques of religion and design.

In attacking evolution and materialism, proponents of intelligent design emphasize that the world is too specified and irreducibly complex to have been the product of "pure chance." In contrast, materialist-dialectical thinkers from antiquity to the present have

Blake's Critique of Transcendence Peter Otto, 2000

Blake's Critique of Transcendence is the first full length book to examine in any detail or consistency the relation between Blake's text and the visual designs in The Four Zoas one of the most important works in Blake's oeuvre. It uncovers a Blake deeply engaged with the cultural discourses of his time in profound dialogue with Swedenborg, Locke and Young. In the course of this conversation Blake anatomizes a remarkable variety of cultural practices including religion, science and art designed to achieve transcendence. He focuses in particular on the fate of the body in cultures of transcendence developing perhaps the first theory of sexual sublimation. Blake's radical visual and verbal strategies in this poem are part of an attempt to defer the movement of transcendence long enough for the reader to see the warring elements of the fallen world as the dismembered body of humanity.

After discussing Kant and agnosticism with respect to the existence of God, the author examines the claims of positivism and scientism and the atheism of Marx. He then proceeds to discuss existential phenomenology and atheism, the projection theories of psychologism, the atheism of Nietzsche, Sartre and Merleau-Ponty. A special feature of this work is the attention the author gives to the atheism of the theists and his
