

GENERAL LABORATORY INSTRUCTIONS

All laboratory work involves common consideration for the safety and convenience of oneself and others. In addition, certain laboratory techniques are so common and some procedures such as record-keeping so important that they apply very generally to chemical experimentation in research or course work. These topics are brought together in this and the following sections.

Safety

The potential hazards associated with laboratory work are serious, and every effort must be made to avoid accidents. It is not enough for us simply to say "be careful," because you may not be sufficiently informed about the materials and practices for which care is needed. The following list itemizes the precautions that must be taken to minimize danger to yourself and others.

1. Undertake no unauthorized experiments.
2. Wear safety glasses.
3. Wear shoes that fully cover the feet; sandals are inadequate.
4. Wear protective clothing; lab aprons or lab coats are best, but old clothes are satisfactory.
5. Know the location of these pieces of equipment and how to operate them.
 - (a) fire extinguisher
 - (b) safety shower
 - (c) eye fountain or spray
6. Observe the following simple laboratory practices.
 - (a) Never taste a chemical.
 - (b) Never pipet a liquid by mouth; always use a rubber bulb.
 - (c) Never smell the vapors of a chemical except by gently fanning some of the vapors toward your face; do not breathe deeply.
 - (d) Never generate poisonous or strongly irritating gases except under a hood that has strong ventilation.
 - (e) Never pour water into a concentrated acid; always slowly pour the acid into the water with stirring.

Textbook of Botany Charles Elmer Allen, Edward Martinus Gilbert, 1917 Excerpt from Textbook of Botany There are such wide differences of opinion regarding the proper content of an elementary course in botany that no teacher would venture to put forth a particular selection of facts and principles as the only one wisely to be made from the great body of knowledge concerning plants The present writers are quite uninclined to adopt such an attitude toward their own choice still less would they insist upon the precise order in which the materials they have selected should be presented We are convinced however that an introductory course can best be centered about a fairly intensive study of a small number of plants and that an attempt at a more desultory treatment of the subject must prove unsatisfactory The plants used as types should be easily available and so far as possible they should be selected from among those that already have definite meanings to the pupil either because of their familiarity or because of their utility In addition the predominance and the practical significance of the seed plants may be recognized by devoting some time to a study of their divers forms and uses and in this study too illustrations should be drawn chiefly from those plants of which the pupil sees or hears most in his everyday life At whatever point in the course this latter work is done it should have been preceded by an intensive study of the life of at least one particular seed plant The present book offers a sufficient amount of work for a year s course Probably all teachers will agree that a secondary school course in botany should not occupy less time than this although unfortunately the ideal is often impossible of attainment The order of presentation here adopted is that which will probably in general be most satisfactory in schools that begin the study of botany in the fall Bulletin, Chicago School of Sanitary
