Purpose: To review a series of critically ill obstetric patients admitted to a general intensive care unit in a Canadian centre, to assess the spectrum of diseases, interventions required and outcome.

Methods: A retrospective chart review was performed of obstetric patients admitted to the intensive care unit of an academic hospital with a high-risk obstetric service, during a five-year period. Data obtained included the admission diagnosis, ICU course and outcome. Daily APACHE II and TISS scores were recorded.

Results: Sixty-five obstetric patients, representing 0.26% of deliveries in this hospital, were admitted to the ICU during the study period. All had received prenatal care. Admission diagnoses included obstetric (71%) and non-obstetric (29%) complications. The mean APACHE II score was 6.8 ± 4.2 and mean TISS score was 24 ± 8.1 . Twenty-seven patients (42%) required mechanical ventilation. No maternal mortality occurred and the perinatal mortality rate was 11%.

Conclusions: A small proportion of obstetric patients develop complications requiring ICU admission. The outcome in this study was excellent, in contrast to that reported in other published studies with similar ICU admission rates. The universal availability of prenatal care may be an important factor in the outcome of this group of patients. The lack of a specific severity of illness scoring system for the pregnant patient makes comparison of case series difficult.

Objectifs : Revier les dossiers d'une groupe de parturientes sérieusement malades admises à l'unité des soins intensifs (USI) généraux d'un centre hospitalier canadien, évaluer l'éventail des affections, les interventions nécessaires et les résultats obtenus.

Méthodes : Revue rétrospective de dossiers de parturientes admises à l'USI d'un hôpital universitaire canadien doté d'un service d'obstétrique pour patientes à risques élevés pendant une période de cinq ans. Les données obtenues comprenaient le diagnostic à l'admission, l'évolution à l'USI et les résultats. Les scores APACHE II et TISS étaient enregistrés quotidiennement.

Résultats : Soixante-cinq parturientes représentant 0,26% des accouchements de l'hôpital ont été admises à l'USI pendant la période étudiée. Toutes avaient bénéficié des soins prénataux. Les patientes étaient admises pour des complications obstétricales (71%) ou autres (29%). Les scores APACHE et TISS moyens étaient respectivement $6,8 \pm 4,2$ et $24 \pm 8,1$. Vingt-sept patientes (42%) ont été ventilées mécaniquement. Il n'y a pas eu de mortalité maternelle et le taux de mortalité périnatale était de 11%.

Conclusions : Une faible proportion des parturientes développent des complications nécessitant des soins intensifs. Pour cette étude, les résultats sont excellents, contrairement à d'autres publiés ailleurs comportant des taux d'admission aux soins intensifs identiques. L'universalité de l'accès aux soins prénataux pourrait influencer considérablement les résultats dans ce groupe de patientes. L'absence d'un système de score spécifique à la gravité des affections de la grossesse rend la comparaison entre séries difficile.
