

"Primitive Survivals and Second Skins: John Hawkes's Second Skin"¹

1

The novel's title was suggested to the author by a passage in Celine's Journey to the End of the Night when Ferdinand, about to sail for Africa, remarks that the many coats of paint applied to the hull of the Admiral Bragueton constitute a kind of second skin. Hawkes always had a knack for picking evocative titles—The Beetle Leg, the Lime Twig—but this choice was particularly fortuitous—for the title becomes a multi-layered metaphor that permeates the novel's texture and highlights its basic meanings. "Second skin" implies a duality, even a duplicity, about the nature of the world. Most obviously, it refers to clothes, what Thoreau called our "false skins," since clothes symbolize the misleading masks and social roles that people put on. Just as significantly, the novel's title makes us acutely aware of numerous interactions—with environments, dwellings, possessions, relatives, friends, enemies, lovers, and ourselves—that dramatize how vulnerable our skins are to violence and abrasive contact as well as the exquisite sensitivities we have to love and a gentle touch.

"Landscape" is a key term in Hawkes's aesthetic. The underlying strategy of his work has always been to create through poetic impulse and imagistic language a visionary world, a stylistically charged place where dream and nightmare merge and where the inner fears and desires of us all confront the destructive and saving forces of the outer environment. The result is always a distorted, heightened, surreal scene that depicts, usually in a disturbing and disorienting way, the liberating and annihilating possibilities of life and language. The narrator Skipper, however, is a frustrating challenge for the reader. He is passive in many of the book's crucial scenes, with an unsettling inability to take meaningful action to protect his daughter Cassandra or to redeem himself. As in a nightmare, he is often at the mercy of forces he can neither confront nor control.

Second Skin is the richest of Hawkes's fictions largely because the novel's profoundly contrasting landscapes—haunted New England island and charmed tropical paradise—sound the whole register of his contrapuntal art, tapping the full resources of his prodigious verbal gifts. In a note to his publisher Hawkes stated his intentions:

Text Into Image, 1997 Text into Image: Image into Text is a truly interdisciplinary publication. Whilst all of the contributions focus upon the central problem of the relationship between literature and the visual arts, one which has lost nothing of its fascination as the debate has expanded in numerous forms from antiquity into the realm of postmodern theory, they come from contributors working in a large number of different areas. Represented are academics from the worlds of German Studies, French Studies, English Studies, Art History, and Film Studies. Given their backgrounds, each of the contributors can offer a different perspective upon the core issue of translation between media, but perhaps most valuable is the combination of perspectives made possible by the arrangement of the volume into sections dealing with aspects of the image-text debate. In the same way that the volume gains by ranging across traditional disciplinary boundaries, so it also gains from dealing with a wide range of historical material, from to take only one possible route: Baroque iconography through Romantic imagery to Expressionist agony

American Fiction Since 1940 Tony Hilfer, 2014-09-25 In this remarkable book, Tony Hilfer provides a major survey of the wealth of post-war American fiction. He analyses the major modes and genres of writing from realist to postmodernist, metafiction, and black humour; the fiction of social protest, women's writing, and the traditions of African American, Southern, and Jewish American fiction. Key writers discussed include William Faulkner, Norman Mailer, Ralph Ellison, Saul Bellow, Joseph Heller, Vladimir Nabokov, and Joyce Carol Oates. The book concludes by exploring contemporary trends through detailed case studies of Donald Barthelme and Toni Morrison
