

CASTLE

Hundreds of years ago, the European kingdoms and vast lands contained the powerful people built castles — strong fortresses where they could rise shelter from their enemies, or launch attacks against them. Usually a settlement, or town, centered the castle. The king gave the land and the castle to nobles in return for their loyalty and military help.

Nobles formed the king's army, to defend his lands. They moved enough to live on and were protected in return by the king and his soldiers. Nobles gave the castle walls around the world outside. The king and his soldiers managed the castle and the lands around it. Below the officials in rank were priests, important advisors, and soldiers. In the bottom of castle society were the most humble workers, such as farmers and the peasant churchmen below.
