Ralph Negrine,2013-06-19 Originally published in 1988 this book provides a thorough examination of the possibilities and key issues in satellite technology which at the time already seemed likely to change the face of broadcasting both within nations and internationally It begins with a guide to the technical development of different systems of satellites and signal reception and an outline of the international political and regulatory issues involved It then examines the situation in various industrialised countries by analysing launching plans funding the interaction between satellite cable and VCRs and the effect on existing broadcasting systems Concerned throughout with a wide range of cultural considerations and the potential impacts of the new media this is a useful reflection on the time Direct Broadcast Satellite Service and Competition in the

Broadcast Satellite, Telephone / Traditional Cable Christoph Koch,2002-05-02 Seminar paper from the year 1999 in the subject Communications Movies and Television grade 2 B Ohio University School of Telecommunication course Cable Communications language English abstract It was only a very small report on the front page of last Thursday s issue of USA Today but it indicated a tremendous change not only for America s telecommunications market but also for its society as a whole In a small box between headlines about the crisis in Kosovo the interested reader could find out that AT T had announced to purchase cable giant MediaOne and that software producer Microsoft was about to invest 5 billion in AT T shares This huge move won t let the video distribution market unchanged and many experts believe that this merger has triggered a lot of new developments in all kinds of fields This paper deals with the competition between traditional wired cable as we know it since the beginnings of television on the one hand and newer services like direct broadcast satellites DBS and video and data distribution via telephone lines While the first part will mainly cover the latest developments in the telephony business focusing on the breathtaking AT T deal the second part will compare the benefits of cable and DBS in detail It lies in the nature of the subject that the playing field can change in a couple of weeks if not even in a couple of hours Therefor it is very important to rely on up to date information and literature Especially literature from before the 1996 Telecommunications Act which allowed cross ownership between cable and telephony and the like can t be considered too useful and was used only to get a historic idea of the subject matter In doing research in this field one also has to be especially careful not to rely on sources that are heavily influenced by either the cable or the DBS lobby Both groups naturally try to present the facts in a light that makes them look better and emphasizes the advantages of their particular system over the ones of the competition Star on the Horizon: The Emergence of the Direct Broadcast Satellite in American Mass Communications ,1984 The purpose of this thesis is to describe the concept of broadcasting from satellites directly to the viewer equipped with a small inexpensive receiving antenna and the evolution of this technology as a means of commercial broadcast. Emphasis is placed on the problems of developing a regulatory framework for DBS by the Federal Communications Commission. The opposition of the existing broadcasters to the unregulated development of direct broadcast satellite DBS is explored in light of the possible effect that DBS may have on the economic base audience and advertising revenue of existing broadcasters. The information for this study was obtained from government documents, legal journals, books, and the popular press. Two basic conclusions are drawn from this study: First, that the existing broadcasters have opposed the marketplace development of DBS, and second, that DBS does not pose as great a threat at least in the near term as the broadcasters fear. Author: The United States and the Direct Broadcast Satellite Sara Fletcher

Luther, 1988. The possibilities of Direct Broadcast by Satellite DBS have provoked serious debate in modern telecommunications circles, raising vital questions of state sovereignty, cultural interaction, and the functioning of political and economic systems. In this ground-breaking study, Dr. Luther identifies the social, political, and economic factors underlying the evolving international controversy and situates the debate in the larger arena of postwar power relationships, including the rise of socialist and Third World countries. Placing these issues in a unique historical framework, she discusses the rise of international regulation through the International Telecommunications Union (ITU), the role of radio interests in the United States, and the legitimizing effect of the then-emerging mass communications research and scholarship. Dr. Luther also devotes particular attention to the First Amendment and free flow arguments put forth by the United States in support of an unfettered international transmission of radio and television signals via satellite. A provocative, insightful work. The United States and the Direct Broadcast Satellite will do much to help clarify the ongoing DBS debate. Direct Broadcast Satellite: Radio Program James E. NASA is committed to providing technology development that leads to the introduction of new commercial applications for communications satellites. The Direct Broadcast Satellite Radio DBS R Program is a joint effort between The National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) and The United States Information Agency Voice of America (USIA VOA) directed at this objective. The purpose of this program is to define the service and develop the technology for a direct to listener satellite sound broadcasting system. The DBS R Program, as structured by NASA and VOA, is now a three-phase program designed to help the U.S. commercial communications satellite and receiver industry bring about this new communications service. Major efforts are being directed towards frequency planning, hardware, and service development, service demonstration, and experimentation with new satellite and receiver technology.
