Layers of the Earth

Chapter 1: Temperature and Composition

Temperature: Temperatures deep inside the earth can range from 5,000°C (9,000°F) just a few km in the core. Because of such extreme pressures, solid metal exists in the core. Instead of having any free flow (it is too compact) the system is so densely packed that it forms a structure of solid atoms and molecules that are packed very tightly together. The temperatures inside the core are about 5,000 °C with the temperature decreasing as you move out towards the surface, being the average temperature about 15 °C at the surface.

The lithosphere is the outer layer, averaging about 1,000°C, and is slightly cooler than the atmosphere above it. It includes what is also called the "crust" or lithosphere. The upper mantle is the layer between the crust and the lower mantle. The upper mantle is the hottest of the atmosphere at about 5,000°C, and the lower mantle is the coolest, reaching temperatures over 1,000°C.

Finally, the core is the hottest at about 5,000°C, being the "core" of the planet.
