Character Education Through Story:

Character Education Through Stories Paul Michael Watts, 2023 Stories have long been used as a vehicle to teach about character and virtue Insight into the efficacy and potential of stories for this purpose can be gained through reviewing historical and theoretical approaches together with research studies which have explored children s cognitive and behavioural outcomes virtue literacy development and the factors that may influence their learning However while historical and contemporary theory and research on this topic can be illuminating there has been a notable absence of research into the perceptions and approaches of those who arguably have the best understanding of children s learning classroom teachers This thesis contributes to existing knowledge in the field through filling this void in the research literature and examining how and the extent to which primary school teachers in England value and use stories as a vehicle to teach character education First the existing theory and research relating to story based character education is examined The rationale methodology and findings of the research study are then presented the findings are interpreted and the implications for the theory and practice of story based character are discussed The research study followed a quasi mixed design in which there were two strands running sequentially In strand one predominantly quantitative data were collected through a survey which was administered to primary school teachers online N 220 In strand two qualitative data were collected through one to one semi structured interviews with primary school teachers n 15 The research findings offer new insight by indicating how primary school teachers value and use stories as a vehicle for teaching character education and how teachers perceptions and approaches align with those documented in the existing literature As such the findings highlight areas of current practice that corroborate but also add qualification to and extend existing knowledge in the field Primary school teachers in this study were found to highly value stories as a vehicle through which to teach character education Notably stories were highlighted as the main and most useful vehicle that primary school teachers have to develop the character of their pupils The findings also reveal that primary school teachers seek to facilitate pupils learning from short stories through questioning discussion and other reading related activities While some of the approaches used by primary school teachers appear to overlap with those documented in the existing literature the story types used in primary schools differ from the story types advocated in some research informed and contemporary approaches Primary school teachers utilise short simplistic stories and some appear to refrain from using religious stories and more detailed narratives As a result it is contended that opportunities to develop capacities associated with the moral imagination and virtue literacy such as the ability of pupils to deliberate and reason about competing virtues in story and real life contexts may be missed The findings also indicate that very few primary school teachers have received training in using stories to teach character education despite the majority reporting that they use stories for this purpose at least once a week While the findings indicate that primary school teachers are conscious of some of the factors that have previously been found to influence children s learning from stories such as the age of story characters and similarity of story contexts to pupils lives the potential detrimental effects of fantastical story content are not acknowledged to the same extent These findings have implications for the future training and development of primary school teachers there appears to be a need for professional development in the use of stories to teach character education and related areas in schools There may be potential to enhance practice through engagement with the existing theory and research literature which points to the value of using rich story characters and contexts as a basis for developing virtue reasoning and deliberation Furthermore the findings indicate that despite the high value attributed to stories for teaching character education primary school teachers have limited time to carry this out in practice due to the perceived demands of the wider curriculum The potential value of story based character education as a means through which to help to develop the character and personal development of pupils may be constrained as a result Character Education

Through Stories, Music, and Imagery Linda T Powell, 2023-09 Character Education Through Stores Music and Imagery encourages children to recognize and grow their own character traits This book includes 20 stories relaxation exercises and short pieces of classical music Included is a guide for teachers parents counselors therapists and program directors with clear directions on how to use the Stories Music and Imagery process with children The children listen to an original story learn a relaxation technique to quiet their body and mind focus their attention during reflective time to a short piece of beautiful classical music then write draw or verbally share their experience This process gives children a chance to express what the story means to them and how that character trait is present in their life Ten stories for younger children explore character traits of beauty clearing cooperation confidence friendship growth honesty patience support and trust Ten stories for older children explore the character traits of acknowledgement appreciation choice communication expression focus gratitude persistence possibilities and respect The Stories Music and Imagery process brings together the power of the story benefits of relaxation clarity of focused attention beauty of music wisdom of the child and support from the adult
