

ADVANCED TECHNIQUES

RADIAL BLUR/"BURST"

When you have the hatching lines bursting out in every direction from an origin point, it feels like a "burst" or "zoom" effect.

CURVES

Here's where things start getting a little more complex. Often times, the direction of a motion isn't as simple as "right, left, up, down." First, some things move in arcs, like the swing of a sword. Here, you can curve the speed lines to show that motion.

"PROGRESSIVE BLURRING"

Create a range of motion in a single action by progressively changing the length of the speed lines from where the most motion occurs to where the least motion occurs.

(This one's probably one of the most helpful techniques on this list. I've tried not to use it as much as possible until now but it's hard not to when you know to do it.)
