The Characteristics of the Negro People H. T. Kealing, 2013-04-28 The characteristics of the Negro are of two kinds the inborn and the inbred As they reveal themselves to us this distinction may not be seen but it exists Inborn qualities are ineradicable they belong to the blood they constitute individuality they are independent or nearly so of time and habitat Inbred qualities are acquired and are the result of experience They may be overcome by a reversal of the process which created them The fundamental or inborn characteristics of the Negro may be found in the African as well as the American Negro but the inbred characteristics of the latter belong to the American life alone Some Physical
