

Data Security: Issues And Challenges For Disaster Management In The New Millennium

Mohd Zukime Mat Junoh, Abdullah Osman, Mohd Suberi Ab Halim, Mohd Safizal Abdullah

Abstract: Data security is a crucial issue in new millennium because the business world uses the ICT. All nations in the world may receive threat and are exposed to cybercrime from terrorists to attack their national security. Nowadays, most of organizations such as the government, the private sector and multinational company store important data for various purposes. Generally, the first step in planning the deployment of any IT system for security functionality should be a comprehensive risk analysis of the system for protection and the subsequent generation of a set of security policies. Attempting to bound the Internet from a security standpoint would have been a never ending task. However, many of the conventional risks associated with, for example, the deployment of a corporate IT communication systems may be inappropriate for global public system like the Internet. Thus, some fundamental security principles still hold for the Net and 'necessary' for data security management. This paper discusses the importance of security and how it can be integrated into this emerging market and the policy implication for data security. Finally, this paper seeks to highlight data security issues for national security and challenges in disaster management in the knowledge-based economy in the New Millennium.

Index Terms: data security, disaster management, security policy

1 INTRODUCTION

Information Technology (IT) has become part and parcel of the business world today. In fact, it will continue becoming an even larger factor in the future. Organizations will interlink their IT systems as a result of linking to the Internet, EDI, EFTPoS, etc. All of this might hold an information security risk for an organization. Organizations attempt to secure their own IT-environment, but they have little control over the IT systems they link with. If those external IT-environments are insecure, they might pose a threat to the IT systems in the host environment. The centralised computer systems are now replaced with or connected to the distributed systems. Also, multiple servers are connected to each other on a corporate network to balance their processing power. If one of the servers in the networked environment crashes, troubles will arise for both the users and the company. As organizations link their computer networks to the Internet or to the IT networks of business partners, central control over their IT systems and users, and thus information security can be lost to a large extent. However, the information security policy, which dictates the behaviour of users within an organization, has no influence on any users outside the boundaries of the organization. To ensure a secure IT-environment, under these circumstances, will call for a secure IT community.

The growth of distributed systems and the global business environment make corporate decision makers believe that having a backup or recovery plan is necessary. Many companies need to process the mission-critical information stored in distributed or client/server systems throughout entire enterprise networks. One of the success factors for a company's business operations is based on the continuance of these enterprise networks. Client/server systems have replaced the centrally located mainframe, residing at multiple sites in a building or across a corporate WAN. Consequently, protecting these client/server systems has become a major priority for corporations today [1]. Distributed systems are becoming an architectural standard for networked organizations. These systems have diffused mission-critical data across local area networks, which extend corporate resources to remote work sites. As distributed systems continue to replace the "glass house" environment of the mainframe, the data decentralization is going to increase in the future [2].

2 DEFINING DISASTER

From an information technology (IT) point of view, a disaster is an event that creates an inability to maintain the flow of data necessary for critical operations over a prolonged period of time. This might mean that data got lost and is completely unavailable, or that it is temporarily unretrievable-preventing its access or update. According to Semer [3], possible IT disasters will include:

- natural disasters, such as fires, earthquakes, lightning, storms, and static electricity;
- software malfunctions;
- hardware or system malfunctions;
- power outages;
- computer viruses;
- man-made threats, such as vandalism, hackers, and sabotage; and
- human error, such as improper computer shutdown, spilling liquids on the computer, and cigarette ash.

Unpredictability is a hallmark of disaster. Even if we know what types of disasters are possible, there is seldom any way to anticipate which type will befall. The key, therefore, is to prepare for all types.

Japan's ASEAN Policy Sueo Sudo,2014-12-30 The central puzzle in the study of Japanese foreign policy has been why Japan has continued to play a passive role in international affairs despite its impressive economic and political power Challenging this central puzzle the core argument of this study is to present an alternative path for the study of Japanese foreign policy In fact in recent years Japanese foreign policy has become less dependent on the United States more strategic towards Asia and more energetic towards international and regional institutions One of the main features is multilateralism in Japanese foreign policy as shown by Japan s active participation in the regional institutions In pursuing multilateralism Japan cooperated closely with the only durable regional body in Southeast Asia to wit the Association of Southeast Asian Nations ASEAN Given the fact that East Asian regionalism has been driven by ASEAN it is of utmost urgency to investigate the emerging partnership between Japan and ASEAN The central thesis of this study is thus to put Japan s ASEAN policy into a proper perspective by asserting that Japan s new policy initiatives towards ASEAN are not reactive nor are they exceptions in a broader framework of merely reactive foreign policy
