Dimensions Of Justice And Peace In Religious Education:

Dimensions of Justice and Peace in Religious Education Loretta Carey, Justice/Peace Education Council, 1989 In addressing the process of religious education the constraints of time space and materials often force choices on religious educators The purpose of this booklet is to propose the dimension of justice and peace education to what already exists in most religious education programs It is suggested that educators change their perspective from a personal interpersonal level to a structural level in an attempt to analyze the political economic social and cultural structures of human activity and to see that change can be effected in those structures that deny or inhibit human life Empowering the poor to make decisions and to act for change has been added to the requirement of the Judeo Christian religious tradition of service to the poor Conflict resolution skills should be introduced as a practical alternative to violent response to help convince students that alternatives to violence are available and workable both on the interpersonal and political levels Because culture is a powerful force in transmitting values students must understand the nature of cultural messages so that they can celebrate what is good and resist and transform that which is bad Lastly a sense of global community and hope must be fostered among youth so that changes for justice and peace can be made Each section is followed by short bibliographies for background reading and resources for programs and curriculum Four appendices contain additional resources ideas for evaluation of instructional materials and a list of resource distributors JB
