Congressional Research Congressional Research Service,2014-12-12 The National Popular Vote NPV initiative proposes an agreement among the states an interstate compact that would effectively achieve direct popular election of the President and Vice President without a constitutional amendment It relies on the Constitution s grant of authority to the states in Article II Section 1 to appoint presidential electors in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct Any state that joins the NPV compact pledges to award all its electoral votes to the presidential ticket that wins the most popular votes nationwide regardless of who wins in that particular state The number of electoral votes won by the national popular vote winners would depend on the number of electoral votes controlled by NPV member states The compact would however come into effect only if its success has been assured that is only if states controlling a majority of electoral votes 270 or more join the compact Recent action by the New York legislature to join the compact has generated renewed interest in the NPV initiative At the time of this writing 10 states and the District of Columbia which jointly control 165 electoral votes have joined the compact The National Popular Vote initiative emerged following the presidential election of 2000 in which one ticket gained an electoral vote majority winning the presidency but received fewer popular votes than its opponents NPV grew out of subsequent discussions among scholars and activists about how to avoid similar outcomes in the future and to achieve direct popular election Proponents of NPV assert that it would guarantee the presidential candidates who win the most popular votes nationwide will always win the presidency that it would end the inequities of the general ticket winner take all system of awarding electoral votes and that candidates would extend their focus beyond winning the battleground states campaigning more widely and devoting greater attention to issues of concern to other parts of the country They further assert that NPV would accomplish this while avoiding the exacting standards set for the proposal and ratification of constitutional amendments Opponents argue that NPV would undermine the authority of states under the Constitution and the Founders intention that presidential elections should be both national and federal contests that it is an admitted end run around the Constitution which would circumvent the amendment process and that it might actually lead to more disputed presidential elections characterized by politically contentious state recounts The NPV has also been debated on constitutional and legal grounds Some observers maintain that it must be approved by Congress because it is an interstate compact that would affect key provisions of constitutional presidential election procedures NPV Inc the organization managing the initiative s advocacy campaign responds that congressional approval is not necessary because NPV deals with the appointment of electors a subject that falls within state constitutional authority and that the Supreme Court has previously rejected arguments that similar compacts would impair the rights of nonmember states Other critics claim that NPV might violate the Voting Rights Act by diluting minority voter influence and avoiding the recently invalidated preclearance requirement for election procedures changes in covered jurisdictions In response NPV Inc has asserted that the compact is entirely consistent with the goal of the Voting Rights Act
