

5 TIPS ON CHOOSING A DOG BREED

While they make great members of the family, dogs also demand constant care, attention, exercise and most of all time. You should think of choosing a new dog to bring home like having another child – you have to be ready.

from Benchmark Kennels

1 SIZE

While large dogs are actually usually more docile, they can be intimidating for other pets such as cats. If you live in a small house with no garden, a large dog breed would not be ideal. Your dog would have nowhere outdoors to run off steam, which would require you to take your dog on multiple walks a day.

2 TEMPERAMENT

Keep in mind that mixed breed dogs are usually a combination of their parents. Many mixed-breeds have grown in popularity in recent years, like the 'Cavapoo' and 'Cockerpoo' which carry both spaniel and poodle characteristics making them ideal family pets.

3 LIFESTYLE

Do you want a dog that's highly energetic and can accompany you on runs, hikes and such? Or, are you after a dog that can be largely calm and offer protection when needs be? You should aim to find a dog that fits in with the lifestyle of your household so you can largely stick to your usual routines.

4 AGE

Although puppies may seem more appealing, adult dogs can be better options for busy families, to skip the toilet training. Adult dogs are also usually a lot calmer, less destructive and more socialised so will be able to slot into a home and adapt to your household easier than a baby can, who needs teaching how to behave.

5 COST

Last but not least, think about your budget and how much you have to invest in a new dog. Aside from the initial cost of the animal, there are many ongoing aspects to consider such as vet bills, pet insurance, dog beds, equipment, food, and much more.
