

Fig. 76. Cobelodus aculeatus (COPE). A, reconstruction of skeleton, B, possible appearance in life, from ZANGERL & CASE 1976.

The otico-occipital region of the neurocranium measures about 40% of the overall length of the braincase, and the antero-posterior length of the orbits is about 34% of the total neurocranial length. In the endocranial cavity there is a very pronounced recess for the facialis, trigeminus and acousticus ganglia, an unusually large space behind this recess and paired recesses of undetermined significance immediately dorsal to the mentioned ganglia recesses.

Type species: Styptobasis aculeata COPE 1894 F (Fig. 76); Mecca Quarry shale, Westphalian Upper C or Lower D, Court Creek near Knoxville, Illinois, U.S.A. Common in black carbonaceous shales of the Upper Carboniferous basin complex of central North America. Redescribed by ZANGERL & CASE (1976).

Symmorium COPE 1893 L.

[Cladodus AGASSIZ 1843, in part]

Largest specimens presently known indicate a shark of about 250 to 300 cm in length. Most specimens, however, are of the size range of Cobelodus. Nearly entire skeletons (Figs. 76, 77) of the two genera differ significantly in overall body proportions, and can readily be distinguished. Isolated portions of skeletons, lacking the skulls and thus teeth, however, are virtually impossible to identify. Since Symmorium is much less common in all presently known localities than Cobelodus, and may even be absent from areas west of the Illinois basin, it is safe to state that most specimens in the present collections belong to Cobelodus.

The neurocranium of Symmorium is rather poorly known at present. In its major aspects it was probably similar to that of Cobelodus, including the presence of postorbital arcades with ventral prongs to embrace the palatoquadrate. The mandibular arch is much as in Cobelodus except that both palatoquadrate and lower jaws are provided with tooth wells. The teeth are typically cladodont with relatively large bases and finely striated cusps. A central main cusp and one, two or even three pairs of lateral cusps may occur, presumably all in a single dentition. The mucous membrane denticles along the branchial arches are of the Stemmatias-Gunnelloodus type.

Presently known only from black, carbonaceous shales. Upper Carboniferous, Illinois basin, U.S.A.

Type species: S. reniforme COPE 1893 L.; Court Creek near Knoxville Illinois, U.S.A.; Mecca Quarry shale, Westphalian Upper C or Lower D, not very common in localities along eastern fringe of Illinois basin in Indiana, U.S.A. Redescribed by M.E. WILLIAMS (1979).
