Choosing Schools:

Choosing Homes, Choosing Schools Annette Lareau, Kimberly Goyette, 2014-03-31 A series of policy shifts over the past decade promises to change how Americans decide where to send their children to school. In theory the boom in standardized test scores and charter schools will allow parents to evaluate their assigned neighborhood school or move in search of a better option. But what kind of data do parents actually use while choosing schools? Are there differences among suburban and urban families? How do parents' choices influence school and residential segregation in America? Choosing Homes, Choosing Schools presents a breakthrough analysis of the new era of school choice and what it portends for American neighborhoods. The distinguished contributors to Choosing Homes, Choosing Schools investigate the complex relationship between education, neighborhood, social networks, and larger patterns of inequality. Paul Jargowsky reviews recent trends in segregation by race and class. His analysis shows that segregation between blacks and whites has declined since 1970 but remains extremely high. Moreover, white families with children are less likely than childless whites to live in neighborhoods with more minority residents. In her chapter, Annette Lareau draws on interviews with parents in three suburban neighborhoods to analyze school choice decisions. Surprisingly, she finds that middle and upper class parents do not rely on active research such as school tours or test scores. Instead, most simply trust advice from friends and other people in their network. Their decision making process was largely informal and passive. Eliot Weinginer complements this research when he draws from his data on urban parents. He finds that these families worry endlessly about the selection of a school and that parents of all backgrounds actively consider alternatives including charter schools. Middle and upper class parents relied more on federally mandated report cards, district websites, and online forums, while working class parents use network contacts to gain information on school quality. Little previous research has explored what role school concerns play in the preferences of white and minority parents for particular neighborhoods. Featuring innovative work from more than a dozen scholars, Choosing Homes, Choosing Schools adroitly addresses this gap and provides a firmer understanding of how Americans choose where to live and send their children to school.

Choosing Schools Mark Schneider, Paul Teske, Melissa Marschall, 2002-04-07 School choice seeks to create a competitive arena in which public schools will attain academic excellence, encourage individual student performance, and achieve social balance. In debating the feasibility of this market approach to improving school systems, analysts have focused primarily on schools as suppliers of education, but an important question remains: Will parents be able to function as smart consumers on behalf of their children? Here, a highly respected team of social scientists provides extensive empirical evidence on how parents currently do make these choices. Drawn from four different types of school districts in New York City and suburban New Jersey, their findings not only stress the importance of parental decision making and involvement to school performance but also clarify the issues of school choice in ways that bring much needed balance to the ongoing debate. The authors analyze what parents value in education, how much they know about schools how well they can match what they say they want in schools with what their children get how satisfied they are with their children's schools and how their involvement in the schools is affected by the opportunity to choose They discover most notably that low income parents value education as much as if not more than high income parents but do not have access to the same quality of school information This problem comes under sensitive thorough scrutiny as do a host of other important topics from school performance to segregation to children at risk of being left behind prelude et rag for flute and piano p proust just flutes - Feb 09 2023
